"No More Luxuries for Europe After War; Simplicity and Economy Must Rule All Ranks for Many Years," Says Ferrero

Better Human Nature Finds Itself in Crisis.

Adversity Calmly Faced by Fortune's Spoiled Pets.

Unselfishness and Contentment Now Have a Turn.

THIS is the second in a series of articles by the noted historian on the great war's effect on the world's manner of living. The first, printed last Sunday, expressed the writer's belief that the lessons of the conflict would give the world-wide temperance movement a tremendous impetus. Another will be printed next Sunday, dealing with the effect of the war on letters, art, politics and religion.

By Prof. Guglielmo Ferrero.

THE ladies are satisfied this year with fewer new dresses; pleasure trips, amusements—everything has been reduced. Of Paris, for example, it may be said that there are no more gala dinner or ceremonious receptions. Friends often meet, but the dinners are very simple, and evening dress is no longer seen. And nobody cares.

So if the European war has filled Europe with horrors, ruin and hate, it has also made men more easily contented. The French, the English, the Russians hate the Germans like death; the Germans hate the Russians, English and French in like measure; on the battlefields both are killing away with desperate fury.

But in each nation, far away from the firing lines, where the sound of the canon is not heard, men and women are working with a tranquility that has not been known for some time, and they no longer complain of destiny, although that destiny has become much harder. That furious desire to possess and enjoy, that made men impossible to satisfy, has all of a sudden disappeared.—PROF. FERRERO.

FOR the last 40 years the military authorities have been gravely concerned about a certain question: If increasing wealth would not gradually make the people of Europe lazy.

Their fears were well founded. There is an ancient maxim which has been universally held as true through the ages that the country is a more productive mother of soldiers than the city, the mountains better than the plain, poverty better than riches. The countryman and the mountaineer, from infancy used to the harsh moods of the elements, to the sun, wind, snow, as well as fatigue, to sleepless nights and sobriety, were always considered as possessing better stuff out of which to make soldiers than city men, brought up in comfort and ease, more inclined toward vice, with little resistance against heat and cold, against fatigue and exposure, wind and rain.

We know that during the last 40 years, not only have the cities grown out of all proportion to the country in Europe, but that ease has increased in the country, too, and with ease many comforts, luxuries and vices have crept into the life in the towns and hamlets that for centuries belonged only to the great cities. For the last 20 years the countrymen have no longer lived as in former times. They exchange virtues and vices with the inhabitants of the cities. Therefore, many writers on military subjects asked if in the approaching war Europe would not vainly call to the mountains and plains for those rugged youths who hurried in such numbers to spill their blood in the nineteenth century.

But facts have proved false these fears and forecasts. Not only the farmers and workingmen, but the millionaires as well have hastened with incredible readiness to the trials of the longest and most awful war that has been fought in Europe since the beginning of the nineteenth century. Men who were not able to exist without artificial heat in their houses for at least six months in the year have passed the long, cold winter in the northern trenches. The most bigoted observers of the new religion of the body prescribed by hygiene and her many dogmas have gone weeks without soap and water or a change of clothing.

WE FIND IT EASY TO GIVE UP CIVILIZATION'S CREATURE COMFORTS

MEN used to enjoying long hours of sleep in good beds, to having warm water, light, telephone, servants of flesh and blood, and servants of iron and steel, ready at their nod, in a few days and without difficulty have learned to sleep on a straw pile with their clothes on, to take advantage of the bathing establishments the Creator had placed at their service from the beginning of the world—the rivers and streams. They have learned to content themselves with seeing by the great lamp that nature lights and puts out over our heads every day in the celestial space. They have become their own prompt and ready servants!

To sum up, the European war has demonstrated that the giving up of many pleasures, necessities and comforts that modern civilization has created and established is a much easier thing than any of us thought one year ago. Many needs that seemed as imperious and tyrannical as a second nature we have discovered are hardly even necessary to our being and a little shakeup liberates us from them as from dead skin that peels and falls off.

Man's nature is much less dependent on those things than modern civilization would have us believe. Is this given as an argument in praise of man's nature, or against the customs and inclinations of our times? Before replying to that question it is necessary to study another and greater surprise the world has had from the war. When the danger of a great war that would set all Europe afire was spoken of, many said it was not possible, or would be of exceedingly short duration, not more than a month or two at most, because otherwise there would be a revolution.

"Don't you see," they said, "how exigent all men have become? From the farmhands and workingmen up to men of wealth and position, every one wants to earn, spend, enjoy—always more, more. No one is satisfied with what he has, despite the fact that the rich peace the world is enjoying permits everyone to increase his earnings so rapidly. And you would believe that the men of our times would tolerate a long state of general war, during which, even if a few got rich, most of them would be ruined and would have to live in poverty for economy's sake, and give up almost everything? Why, after two months they would all unite, rich and poor, in all the warring countries, in an enormous revolution, if the Governments didn't make peace. There is no Government which would presume to oppose such a movement." * * *

WAR HAS MADE WHOLE WORLD EASIER TO PLEASE IN ALL WAYS

EVERYONE reasoned in that fashion, and once again, as facts have shown, they were all wrong. The only part of the reasoning that has turned out to be true is that concerning the crisis that would occur at the breaking out of the war. The prediction that a violent outbreak of discontent would occur has proven false.

No, Europe is today all in arms and tumult; but on the firing line, and behind the lines, in the interior of each country, there has never been more calm tranquillity. One would say that the war has rendered more easy to please the most exigent generation in history. Almost all Europe is eating bread of the second quality—coarse bread—that one year ago the workmen and country laborers complained of so bitterly when forced to use it. But today who complains of it or is surprised?

Up to one year ago the city streets were never sufficiently lighted nor were trains ever numerous enough nor fast enough. Today in many cities—even in Paris, the metropolis of pleasure and luxury—the rare individuals one meets passing along the street are hurrying along at early hours by half-dark streets, as happened every evening with our grandfathers in the times when men did not waste fossil coal as they now do.

In all Europe—even in the nonbelligerent states—there are fewer trains and these go more slowly; the passengers are obliged to put up with longer waits and intermediate stations—and more changes. * * * What noise and protest would have been heard a year ago! Now the people are still and resigned.

Those who said that the European war, like all other wars, would enrich a few, but impoverish many, certainly did not err. In the belligerent countries and in the neutral countries as well, how many lawyers, doctors, literary men, artists, business men and manufacturers are forced to remain idle, or hardly earn a little fraction of what they did a year ago. How many property owners and persons with incomes have seen everything disappear. The stock markets closed, business at a standstill, the moratorium almost everywhere proclaimed, the fate of the different states uncertain, none knows any more what he has. Yet everybody seems to consider the catastrophe the most natural thing in the world. Before the war it was only necessary for business to slow up a little for everybody to cry out that it was no longer possible to live; that the state of things was intolerable; that the Governments were worthy of universal execration, because they didn't know how to cure the ill. Today nobody complains and everybody has become economical. Yes, economical.

ECONOMY, LONG-FORGOTTEN WORD, CHIEF FACTOR IN LIFE OF EVERYONE

YES, economical! This word that seemed to be banished from our vocabularies as something blasphemous or repulsive is now on all lips. All the rich families have reduced the great number of servants that in Europe formed the principal luxury of the upper classes. Those who had ten now content themselves with five, those who had five now have three, those who had three or two now have two or one. Many have sold their limousines. In all Europe the sumptuous hotels are empty. The people don't travel, or if they do they have no more ambition to take up quarters in those royal clap-traps that modern bad taste has erected in such quantity along the principal streets all over the world.

The ladies are satisfied this year with fewer new dresses; pleasure trips, amusements—everything has been reduced. Of Paris, for example, it may be said that there are no more gala dinners or ceremonious receptions. Friends often meet, but the dinners are very simple, and evening dress is no longer seen. And nobody cares.

So if the European war has filled Europe with horrors, ruin and hate, it has also made men more easily contented. Thomas Edison Says: "I Can Make War Even More Deadly but I Won't Unless America Is Attacked"

Greatest Scientist, in Special Interview Granted to the Post-Dispatch, Declares His Emblem Is the Dove and That He Will Not Work on Devices to Take Life Except in Defense of His Country—"German War Machine Lesson to Muddling Democracies, but Autocracy Must Vanish From the Earth."

He Dismisses Inquiries as to How Electricity Can Be Used in War With Brusque Remark: "That Is Their Business"—"England the Most Mismanaged Thing in the World," He Exclaims During Discussion of the Conflict.

"YES,! said Mr. Edison, "if the United States gets into war and if my country is attacked, I will help make it worse. Certainly. But it is not essential that we should get into this war. The United States is the only bright spot on the earth today, and we should keep it bright. For us to think of entering the war—of actual conflict with Germany—that is absurd, no matter what happens. We are not prepared to fight. The army we could raise would have no training. It would be just an undisciplined mob.

By HENRY N. HALL.

Staff Writer for the Post-Dispatch and New York World.

WEST ORANGE, N. J., May 29.

"THOMAS A. EDISON."

That would be answer of most people to the question: "Who is the greatest man alive today?"

Although Edison is a citizen of the United States, he belongs to the whole world, for there is no country which his inventive genius has not served, no people to whose progress and happiness he has not contributed.

This is the age of Edison. The magic of his patient genius and his long years of toil have given us most of those things which makes life today better worth living than in the days of our forefathers. Electric light, the phonograph, moving pictures, stock tickers, street railways, dictating machines, the kinetoscope, the transophone, the telescribe—all sprang from his fertile brain, or were made commercially possible by him.

He has wrought great improvement in typewriters, in the telephone and telegraph systems; has made important inventions in the production of portland cement, in the use of concrete, in the distribution of electric current for light, heat and power, and is the inventor of the magnetic ore separator which had done so much for the steel industry. In the office and in the home there is hardly a modern appliance which he did not either invent or improve.

Edison is 68 years old, but except for his hair, which is quite white, there is nothing about him that betrays his age. He is positively boyish, the step is young, the voice is young; the twinkling blue eyes that light up his kindly face tell of a mind that will never grow old. The most youthful thing about him, perhaps, are his extraordinary hands. They are full of expression, at once forceful and delicate.

He is of medium height and sturdy build and walks quickly and with a slight stoop. He pays little attention to his clothes and loves to wear an old and comfortable suit of nondescript color and a plain black tie round his loose open collar.

DEEP-SET EYES ARE THE MOST STRIKING FEATURE OF NOBLE HEAD

THE head is a very noble one; beneath the snowy locks his great forehead bulges. The face is oval, but the great breadth of the top of the head takes much of the sternness away from his square jaw. The muscles of the face are very firm, the cheeks show no signs of sagging, the mouth does not droop. It is the face of a man still in his prime.

But the most striking thing about him are his eyes. They are deep set and wide apart. From beneath the dark eyebrows and rather full eyelids the blue eyes peer. They are searching and inquisitive eyes, but they are as determined as they are kindly. Determination shows also in the mouth and jaw. The ears are well shaped and beautifully set. The nose is strong with well curved wings. Edison is the only man of undoubted genius that I have ever met whose face is absolutely without a single abnormal trait. It is a fine, strong, well-balanced head of a fine, strong, well-balanced man.

The first time I ever saw Mr. Edison was many years ago in Paris. He had made Eiffel, the engineer, a present of one of his phonographs and among the few notables gathered in the little room in the tower to listen to the wonderful talking machine was Gounod, the famous French composer. I could not help telling him, when I met him this week in his office, how little he had changed. Edison remembered the occasion perfectly and how those present had been struck as if by something supernatural, just as Edison had been when he first heard his experimental machine repeat after him the verses of "Mary's little lamb."

Then we began to talk about the war and it was clear how deeply Mr. Edison was interested. He told me that he had read every official document published in connection with the events leading up to the outbreak of hostilities. He would not allow himself to be quoted on the subject because, to use his own words, "It is my duty as an American to be neutral," but it was easy to see that he looks upon the struggle as something that goes far deeper than any rivalry between nation and nation, far deeper than any merely political cleaverage, that it is fight to the death between democracy and autocracy.

I CANNOT FORCE MYSELF TO WORK FOR DEATH—DOVE IS MY EMBLEM

BUT Mr. Edison was quite willing to talk about science as applied to warfare. The almost boundless possibilities appeal to his wonderful imagination and his breadth of vision showed in his answer to my first question. He said:

"Of course, science can find many more effective ways of destroying life than by artillery and rifle fire, or the use of high explosives. The possibilities of chemistry and electricity have hardly yet been touched upon in modern warfare. They can do a lot better."

"How?" I asked.

"I don't want to say. I won't tell."

"But do you know of anything better?" I insisted. "Could you invent something more deadly than the gas bombs??"

"Yes, I could, but I can't get myself to work on any such stuff as that. I don't want to destroy life, I want to make the world a better place to live in."

And then laying a kindly hand upon my arm, the great inventor explained:

"You see, my boy, the dove is my emblem."

As I sat facing the man who has mastered the forces of nature and bent them in manifold ways to the service of mankind, I could not help thinking what might be if he had applied his inventive genius to destructive purposes. In quiet, even tones Mr. Edison went on to state the facts.

He is of medium height and sturdy build. He loves to wear an old and comfortable suit of nondescript color and a plain tie round his loose open collar.

THOMAS A. EDISON

"Primitive man fought with clubs and stones, then it was swords and javelins and later bullets and bayonets. When the war began it was shot and shell and high explosives. Now they have only just made a beginning with burning liquids and poisonous gases. The warfare of the future is going to be more and more a matter of chemistry and electricity. There is no knowing where it will end."

"Could they not fight with germs and kill off the whole population by disease?" I ventured. "They might infect an entire country with bubonic plague, for instance."

ELECTRICITY COULD BE USED IN WAR, BUT THAT'S THEIR BUSINESS

MR. EDISON, as is his habit, had brought his right hand up to his ear to catch my question, and he bent forward eagerly. He saw all the possibilities of the idea and with a forceful motion of his hand he swept it aside.

"They haven't got to that yet, thank God. There must be some relics of civilization still left in the very worst of them. Yet the rules of the game don't count for much these days. It's getting to be just a reversion to an animal state. Things are bad enough as it is. The use of gases will be carried out to a much greater extent. Every time a new thing comes along the inventors take hold of it and improve it, but chemistry is playing a greater part in the game than electricity."

"Could electricity be used?" I asked, "for destroying stores of ammunition and setting off high explosives at a distance by wireless?"

"Yes," was the brief reply.

"Then why don't they do it?" I asked. Mr. Edison smiled.

"That's their business, not mine."

"Well, then, could electricity be used to explode a torpedo before it reached its mark?"

"I think not, because the torpedo moves in the water, and it would have to be specially constructed anyway. The enemy would not make it to suit what you want."

"But could a torpedo be diverted from its course by wireless?"

"Not by the ship it was fired at," Mr. Edison said. "Of course it could be controlled by the ship it was fired from. Young Hammond showed that to be possible."

"But is there no way a ship can be protected from the effects of a torpedo?"

Mr. Edison's eyes twinkled as he answered: "Yes, a ship might be so fitted that it would not sink after being hit. I should not be surprised if a big change comes about in ship construction, but you may be sure some way will be found to offset the torpedo. The submarine has been the great offensive weapon of this war, and now the advent of poisonous gases is another."

"And yon know of others, Mr. Edison, don't you?"

"Yes, but I told you I won't tell. I won't invent implements of warfare. Surely it is bad enough without my making it worse."

"But wouldn't you," I asked, "if your country was attacked?"

In a moment Mr. Edison changed his tone. He was in deep earnest and his voice throlled me as he answered:

"Yes, if the United States gets into it and if my country is attacked, I will help make it worse. Certainly. But it is not essential that we should get into this war. The United States is the only bright spot on the earth today, and we should keep it bright. For us to think of entering the war—of actual armed conflict with Germany—that is absurd, no matter what happens. We are no prepared to fight. The army we could raise would have no training. It would be just an undisciplined mob.

"If the worst came to the worst, we can withdraw our Ambassador and shut our Consulates. But there are many ways in which we could make reprisals for injuries done to us than by putting our untrained troops in the battle fields of Europe; and Germany can't get over here to attack us. At least she is in no condition to do that now and will not be unless she wins this war."

WHAT A MISMANAGED THING ENGLAND IS, THEIR MUDDLING IS PAST BELIEF

MR. EDISON knew I had just returned from the front and he asked questions about the actual conditions in Europe, especially about England. Suddenly he said:

"What a mismanaged thing England is—it is past human belief how so great a country can muddle things the way it does. England did worse than muddle her preparations, she didn't make any; then she muddled her recruiting and she muddled her labor and ammunition problems and she muddled at Antwerp and in the Dardanelles. It is the limit of muddling incapacity.

"But that is because England is a true democracy. It will always be so in every democracy. It is only under autocracy that you can get perfect technical efficiency, because it is the only way you can get the highest degree of scientific management. Look at the German war machine. Such a thing is quite impossible in a democracy. But when you get away from mere material progress to the higher things of life, it is the other way about. There autocracy strifles and oppresses. Look at the mess Germany made of her diplomacy. It is almost as unbelievable as England's military muddle.

"Autocracy is seen at its best in Germany just now because the Kaiser is a great autocrat and a very smart man. But the autocrat couldn't always be as smart as the Kaiser is, and then just imagine what autocracy would mean. Believe me, autocracy is a bad thing in this world. What advantages it has are outweighed a thousand times by its dangeres and its drawbacks. The world is getting sick of autocracy. We are all going to be democrats; even Germany is going to be a democracy when this war is over."

THEY DON'T ACT LIKE GERMANS, THEY ARE INTOXICATED BY LEADERS

AND then Edison went on to talk of the Germans as he has known them and worked with them for years. His manner and his voice alike showed the kindly feelings he has for them.

"My place here is full of Germans and all along, ever since I started, at least 90 per cent of the workingmen in my laboratory have been Germans. I have always found them to be kind and humane people. But over there they seem to have gone mad. They have been intoxicated by their leaders. They don't act like Germans. I have tried without success to picture to myself the mind of the man who sank the Lusitania. The act was typical of autocracy; for a very small material advantage they did themselves a great moral harm.

"It is an extraordinary thing. Scientists say, that this old earth of ours is passing through a belt of benzol in space. You know there are belts of hydrocarbon vapors. Whatever it is we are passing through, it is something that affects people's minds because part of the world seems to have gone mad."

Edison figures out that he has lived more than 120 years already and that if he goes on working at the present rate for another ten years he will have more than doubled man's ordinary span of life. That is because he always has worked twice as long hours as an ordinary man.

SELLING NEWSPAPER BOUGHT ON CREDIT GAVE HIM FIRST CAPITAL

THOMAS A. EDISON was born in 1847, at Milan, O., and before he was 10 years old he had started a chemical laboratory in the cellar of his home. At 12 he was earning his own living as newsboy on trains of the Grand Trunk Railroad, running between Detroit and Port Huron, where he lived. In 1862 he started the Weekly Herald, the first newspaper ever printed on a moving train and here is the story of how he got his first capital which enabled him to start the paper. When the battle of Pittsburg Landing was fought news came that there were 60,000 killed or wounded. He knew there would be a tremendous demand for the Detroit Free Press if only people along the line knew it would carry a full report.

Young Edison went to the telegraph operator and told him he would give him any magazine he carried for six months free if he would wire the main facts of the battle to all the stations along the line. The telegraph operator did his work amazingly well and young Edison went to Mr. Story, the proprietor of the Detroit Free Press, and told him that he had only enough money to buy 400 papers, but he wanted 1000 copies.

"Mr. Story," he said, "I am only a newsboy, and thought perhaps you would trust me for 600 papers. You see it would be foolish of me not to pay for them, for then I should be out of a job as a newsboy."

He got his papers and sold them all from 10 cents to 25 cents a copy. With more than $100 in his pocket he bought an old hand press and 300 pounds of well-worn type and started his paper. But it did not live long. He had seen what the telegraph could do and jumped at a chance to learn it.

One day he saved a little girl's life, and the child's father offered to teach him telegraphy. Inside of four months Edison had put up a telegraph line from Port Huron station to the village and was working in the local office. The following year, when he was only 16, he got his first regular job as telegraph operator, at Stratford Junction, in Canada. There it was that he made his first invention.

The circuit manager, suspecting the boy operator might fall asleep, told him to tick off the signal "Six" every half hour during the night. The next day Edison rigged up a wheel with notches that ticked off the signal automatically. For five years Edison stuck to operating and worked in a dozen cities. He lost his job at Stratford because while he was inventing something he let a train run by. He lost a job at Memphis because his head was too full of duplex transmission. He lost a job at Louisville because sulphuric acid that he was experimenting with at night leaked through the floor and did damage in the rooms below.

When he was 19 he was working for the

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Blaming It on Wilson.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

For some years I have been a reader of the Sunday Post-Dispatch. I have observed your policies politically and know how valiantly you fought to land Woodrow Wilson in the presidential chair. You heralded him as the only living exponent of "The new freedom." He was elected and I believe is now our Chief Executive. So I take it that this country is being run to your liking.

I notice a paragraph in last Sunday's paper which is as follows: "Joy and gladness dwell in the household of the man who owns his own home." I agree with you. Therefore, it becomes my painful duty to inform you of the following facts about home ownership for the city of St. Louis:

Homes owned free 16,097
Homes mortgaged 9,699
Homes rented 90,983

The object of this letter is to call to your attention that according to your own logic 86 per cent of the homes of St. Louis can have no "Joy and gladness."

Observe Decoration Day.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

It is awful to think that the large stores of the city are not going to close on a day like Decoration day, Monday? Decoration day being on a Sunday, why not celebrate it Monday? Think about the crisis before us. Be patriotic and American. It is downright wrong not to celebrate Decoration day, the day is a legal holiday. I think the stores and factories ought to close at least a half day and I know that a good many thousand employes are Americans.

Radical Claims for Women.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

On various occasions I have heard women make the statement that they were entitled to the same rights and privileges that men were entitled to, that is: cigarette smoking, drinking liquor, etc. I granted that they were, but I wondered whether the women were really foolish enough, and narrow enough to adopt the same vile habits and customs that men have been subject to.

I voted for woman's suffrage at our last State election, but my vote was not cast to give them any such rights or privileges. I voted for the purpose of getting the support of the mothers', daughters' and sisters' moral influences to help overthrow the very vile conditions that some narrow women claim they have a right to. Any thing, or condition, that has a demoralizing effect upon the mind or physical constitution is contrary to right and therefore out of harmony with the true purposes of the laws of nature, whose highest ideal spells love. (I mean spiritual love not physical love.)

Cigarette smoking, drinking liquor and hitting the high trail are all akin and will ultimately lead to destruction. Action and reaction go hand in hand. The reaction is toned according to the action. The leaders of the woman's cause should continually impress upon the minds of their less "intellectual" sisters the danger of such foolish theories.

EX RAY.

To the Friends of Belgium.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Let us work for the Belgian relief with eagerness and devotion and not stop giving at any time for such a good cause, and let us thank God for such a good occasion to be charitable. There are some who say that instead of helping unfortunate Belgians now they will save their money and when the war is over they will go and give the necessary help to their parents and relatives. This is very well, but if all would act so the Belgians would be dead from hunger. One should not think thus. It is now, today, tomorrow, and always as long as this terrible war lasts that one must give for the help and good of all the Belgians.

It is our duty, Belgians, Frenchmen and Englishmen, to help the suffering Belgians with all our might. What remorse for us, if through our avarice we let that unhappy people die of hunger. I hope that the one who refuses to give for all does not deserve to have his relatives helped. We should not regret that our donations do not go directly to our own beloved. Let us unite and give for all, as all must eat.

I will never forget the generosity of the Americans. I have seen them at work and still see them daily. These are the ones who have done the most to help the Belgians and I thank them and pray that God may bless all these good, charitable souls. After the war is over I promise to do all that I can to help the poor Americans in St. Louis in return for all the Americans have done for our poor people.

ANOTHER MEXICAN CRISIS.

The intimation from Washington that action to remedy chaotic conditions in Mexico will follow the President's appeal for contributions to succor starving Mexicans profoundly interests the American people.

The gigantic European conflict and the problems growing out of it have drawn attention away from Mexico, where conditions have gone from bad to worse. They have reached the worst now, with the country torn by contending factions which were united against Huerta.

The President is said to have received from Duval West, his personal representative, reports showing appalling devastation and conditions threatening the safety and the interests of all foreigners in Mexico, including Americans.

The reckless disregard of American and all foreign rights in Mexico and the injuries inflicted upon foreigners in person and property, would, under ordinary circumstances, have brought drastic action. We have exercised the greatest patience, restraint and consideration; nor is there reason to regret that we have done so. It is to the credit of the Wilson administration that, under heavy provocation to intervene, it has given the Mexicans full opportunity to settle their differences and restore orderly government.

Happily, the first intervention is wholly humane. It is a relief movement. The President asks the American people to save the lives of the Mexican people who have been brought to starvation by the disorders of long-continued warfare between ambitious and reckless leaders. We can respond to this appeal with clear consciences. We should respond to it generously as a duty to suffering neighbors who individually are not responsible for their miserable plight.

The American people are not looking for trouble. They do not want to undertake intervention by force to restore order in Mexico. Nothing but manifest, extreme necessity will reconcile them to using force and assuming the task of establishing orderly government there. They realize that the necessity may arise, that our own vital interests and the cause of humanity may require action. We have nothing to gain except order, the protection of all those who must deal with Mexicans and the welfare of a people who are such close neighbors that their conditions seriously affect us. We are pledged not to seek land or advantage in dealing with Mexico.

President Wilson knows the temper and attitude of Americans towards Mexico. He has been the leader of the "peace and patience" elements. He can be trusted to do nothing rash; nothing that would unnecessarily involve the country in war. When, having taken Vera Cruz, he refrained from driving Huerta out of Mexico and withdrew our forces to give the revolutionists another chance to set up an efficient government, he proved his restraint and his strong desire to avoid trouble. We may be sure he will avoid it now if it is possible to do so without incurring consequences worse than intervention would bring.

THRIFTY STATE'S ATTORNEY.

Under the fee system, a State's Attorney of Madison County, Ill., drew three times as much pay in one year as the similar officer in St. Louis and 65 per cent more than the State's Attorney at Chicago, and in eight years drew a total of $26,203 to part of which his legal right is disputed.

Thus Madison County is giving the world an impressive lesson on the viciousness of the fee system, which promotes disputes, even when it does not encourage criminal graft.

COUNSELOR LANSING'S SLIP.

P. A. Lelong of New Orleans, a native-born American citizen and son of a Frenchman naturalized in this country, has urgent business calling him to France. He wrote the State Department, asking if he could be punished in case he visited that country for not having reported there for military duty and if he could legally be impressed in the French army. In Counselor Robert Lansing's reply this is found:

> It appears that you were born with a dual nationality and the department therefore cannot give you any assurance that you would not be held liable for the performance of military service in France, should you voluntarily place yourself within French jurisdiction.

Mr. Lansing is wrong. For 100 years the United States has vigorously asserted the rights of its naturalized citizens against countries unwilling to expatriate them. Once it took an extreme step in defending an Austrian who had only taken out his first papers in this country.

France would have as much right to impress Mr. Lelong as to impress an American whose ancestors for 200 years had been born in this country, and no more.

ITALIAN PARALLELS WITH 1866.

Italy's last European war broke out 49 years ago this spring. Then, with the aid of allies, she fought Austria for Venice, just as she is now preparing to fight her again with the aid of allies for Trent and Trieste. The ephemeral nature of the European issues that cause bloodshed is shown by the fact that whereas her allies then were the Prussians, her allies now are Prussia's enemies.

The diplomatic preliminaries, which this year were completed with the denunciation of the triple alliance on May 4, were consummated in 1866 on April 8 in a treaty with Bismarck. Then as now Austria, seeing war probable, tried to keep the peace with Italy by a voluntary cession of the territory desired. On June 12 she entered into a formal treaty under which Venetia was to be ceded to Napoleon III, to be turned over by him to Italy in the event that Italy kept out of the war. The Italian ministry, however, felt bound in honor to Prussia, which country's declaration of war on Austria, June 16, was followed on June 20 by Italy's.

It is just probable that in the next 90 days Italy may have reason to regret that she did not accept the tender for the peaceful acquisition of the new territory she now desires. At any rate, she had reason for such regret in 1866. Her part in the Seven Weeks' War was a part of unrelieved disaster. Four days after the beginning of the war, the Italian generals, La Marmora and Della Rocca, met a complete defeat at Custozza. The powerful Italian fleet of ironclads was defeated with equal ease by a fleet of Austrian wooden vessels under Admiral Tegetoff at Lissa on July 18. However, the Prussians had beaten the Austrians at Koeniggratz on July 3 and in the treaty of peace that followed Italy was given Venetia as the fruit of a victory to which she contributed but little.

The present Italian Chief of Staff and director of all military operations in the campaign the country is about to undertake is Count Luigi Cadorna, a name of historic associations for Italians. It was a Gen. Cadorna who, after the needs of the Franco-Prussian war had compelled the withdrawl of the French force supporting the Papal court, headed the 60,000 Italian troops that swarmed into Rome in September, 1870, and completed the unification of Italy.

This Cadorna was the father of the present General.

MORE LIGHT ON PRISON ABUSES.

A firm of accountants, acting for a special House committee that is inquiring into the financial affairs of State departments and institutions, finds evidence of many irregularities in the business management of the penitentiary.

Disregard of its obligation toward the erring humanity committed to its care for reclamation has been asserted in much grave criticism of the prison in the past.

The shortcomings now alleged establish, if true, a systematic disregard of its obligations to the taxpayers and flagrant misuse of property held for public uses.

The accountants, Marwick, Mitchell, Peat & Co., declare:

That meats were bought of Armour & Company during 1914 at much higher prices that they could have been obtained for from other packers.

That large purchases of supplies are made without competitive bids, no less than $92,113 worth of goods not contracted for being bought of one grocery firm alone in two years.

That, with the resources of the State of Missouri behind the institution, loans are made of favored bankers at the exorbitant rate of 8 per cent.

That while the clause specifying the minimum number of men for whom the prison labor contractors must pay daily has been enforced against some contractors, it has not been enforced against others, through which favoritism considerable losses have been incurred.

That the three prison automobiles consume astonishing amounts of gasoline. That the repairs of these vehicles in two years amounted to $1965.

Less important charges are made—that the son of the Warden runs a store in which goods of various sorts are sold to the convicts and that commutation for the rations of five convicts employed at the Warden's residence is made at excessive rates in delicacies from the prison commissary. While these practices may seem petty, they nevertheless have importance as revealing the spirit of the management and its sense of responsibility to a great trust.

The most serious of all charges is that the bookkeeping system is defective. An excess payment of $424 to a woolen company was unknown to the management until the accountants discovered it. No adequate records exist from which to check up certain expenditures, including $84,277 spent on a new cell block. Because of this inadequacy, goods valued at $8051 in the commissary department are unaccounted for and a loss of $2462 on livestock is shown.

This is inexcusable. The penitentiary is located at the capital, where the State maintains a costly machinery of accounting and a large force of expert bookkeepers.

There is no stronger invitation to extravagance and even graft than insufficient and unreliable methods of bookkeeping and accounting in public offices and institutions.

This report is another of those forms of publicity which gradually are acquainting the people with the way their penitentiary is run. The people in due time will deal with the abuses in their own way.

THE FATAL MOUSE.

KENOSHA, Wis., May 27.—Miss Edna Engel the 17-year-old daughter of Caspar Engel, was scared to death by a mouse last night. The mouse ran out from under a piece of furniture as she entered her room.

The girl fell unconscious and died without regaining consciousness.

Poor little girl! And no doubt she would have been as bold as a lion—as brave as a lioness—in the face of life's great trials and real dangers that prove the heroism of the frailest women.

Mollie Pitcher, we venture, was afraid of a mouse. Grace Darling, we suppose, was afraid of a mouse. Joan of Arc was afraid of a mouse. Diana chased boars, but she would have run from a mouse. The circus ladies that subdue tigers in a cage with a riding whip are in mortal dread of the little mus musculus of the subfamily Muridae of the order Rodentia that dotes on cheese; while the moral giantesses who are not afraid to beard man himself in his political den, lose their militancy and fly into panic at sight of one of the tiny pantry pests. A handful of harmless mice, we dare say, could rout a regiment of Pankhursts and a battalion of Emma Goldmans armed to the teeth.

But nothing in the world is as timid as the mouse itself except a man. We refer, of course, to the mere man. He is afraid of everything in the world except a mouse. Every man in the world is afraid of a dentist, a tax collector and a crying baby. Every man in the world is afraid of the wee small voice of conscience, and the mere man runs from his own shadow. Every man in the world is afraid of some one little woman, somewhere, while the mere man is afraid of them all.

CHANT OF HATE AGAINST RAIN.

DROUTH and desert, they matter not,
The winds blow cold, or the winds blow hot;
We love them not, we hate them not,
We open the irrigation gate,
We have but one and only hate,
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone.

It is known to you all, it is known to you all,
It crouches behind the yellow flood,
Full of envy, of rage, of craft, of gall,
Desiring to bury us all in mud.
Come let us stand at the judgment place,
An oath to swear to, face to face,
On oath of bronze no wind can shake,
An oath for our sons and their sons to take.

Come, hear the word, repeat the word,
Throughout the nation be it heard,
We will never forego our hate,
We have all but a single hate,
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
RAIN!

In the farmer's barn, in the harness room,
Sat waiting the hired men in gloom;
Like a call for help, like a dying wail,
One seized his hat, held high to hail;
To them, all parted from their pay,
Spoke three words only: "To the day!"

Why designate?
They had all but a single hate.
Why did they groan?
They had one foe and one alone—
RAIN!

Take you the wheat and the corn in pay,
Sweep all the bridges far away,
Despoil the bin and rob the mow,
It cannot matter greatly now.
Drouth and desert, they matter not,
Their blight, their terrors are forgot.
We fight the fight with things from cans,
And the last great victory is man's.
This shall we hate with a lasting hate,
We will never forego our hate,
Hate by farmer and hate by hand,
Hate while the last dry hill shall stand.
Hate of the country and the town,
Hate till the last man comes to drown.
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
RAIN!

CHEERFUL VIEW OF THE WAR IN BUFFALO.

Would an epidemic of cholera stop the war? If so, would an epidemic of cholera be welcome?

Cholera appeared on the eastern fighting line last fall. Experts predict that when the spring thaws come the thousands of rotting bodies of men and horses will render large areas in western Europe highly insanitary. It is their opinion that cholera will attack the armies on the western battle line as well as on the eastern.

Cholera can kill as fast as war. If it speeds across Europe it will take the lives of combatants and noncombatants alike. It will, however, leave human habitations standing. It will spare the handiwork of centuries. It will not leave the survivors the task of re-creating and restoring from the ground up.

Much may be said to support the view that the plague would be a mercy if it forced the nations to cease fighting and destroying each other and unite in battling to save themselves from pestilence.

REST, SOLDIER, REST!

SLEEP, Soldier—sleep! With all the peaceful brave,
Heroic dust of patriotic pride—
While o'er thy rest the silent grasses wave,
And honor with thy glory doth abide!
No more shall fife and drum's weird measured notes
Arouse war's fervent zeal within thy breast—
A peaceful banner o'er thy slumber floats,
A nation bids thee rest, O Soldier, rest!

Sleep, Soldier—sleep! A wreath for valor's crown
We place upon thy bier of sacred dust—
A tear for tenets ye would not disown
We shed in reverence of tribute just:
O martial music, sound thy rolling chords,
O Liberty, sing out with soulful zest!
And humble lips breathe low the simple words,
Peace to thy soul, and rest, O Soldier, rest!

Sleep, Soldier—sleep! No more on earthly air
Doth battle's din above thy slumbers roll—
Where banners wave, and flowers fresh and fair
Bloom round the mortal temple of thy soul;
And stars of heaven far above thee gleam,
Where pass the silent legions of the blest—
Who whisper faintly through thy endless dream,
"Sleep soft, Time's hero—Rest! O Soldier, rest!"

TO MARY.

Meum et tuum.

FAR out where the dim trails thread their way
Through the sage and cactus lands I go
To see, in the dreams of a bygone day,
My little pal of the long ago.

There, evermore, as she rides along,
Her face agleam with the sun's bright gold,
She hums the tune of a simple song
I sang to her in the days of old.

Her hair flung down in a wild cascade
Of ribbonless curls, she rides to me
O'er the winding trails to the everglade
Of the old ranch range of the used to be.

And once again, as in yester years,
We race away o'er the prairie sod—
'Til I, at length, in a mist of tears,
Am left alone at the feet of God.

Dear little friend, you have found, we'll say,
A better range than the West may know;
But often, in dreams, I shall steal away
To ride with you in the long ago

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

AS TO TOBACCO.

BUDBECK.—A medical journal says: "One of the principal constituents accounting for the germicidal properties of tobacco smoke is the powerful antiseptic formaldehyde. The amount present is more than just appreciable, for if water through which a few puffs of tobacco smoke have been passed is tested for formaldehyde the result is strikingly positive. The quantity of formaldehyde in tobacco smoke would appear to depend on the quality and kind of tobacco smoked. Thus the cigar appears to yield more formaldehyde than the pipe, and the pipe more than the cigarette. It has more than once been stated that tobacco smokers enjoy an immunity from certain diseases, and the frequent presence of a powerful antiseptic in the mouth, nasal passages and sometimes the lungs (as in the case of those who foolishly inhale tobacco smoke), would to some extent justify the statement. Dr. Gibson of the United States navy says of tobacco: "It leads to impaired nutrition of the nerve centers; it is a fertile cause of neuralgia, vertigo and indigestion; it irritates the mouth and throat, and thus destroys the purity of the voice; by excitation of the optic nerve, it provokes amaurosis and other defects of vision; it causes a tremulous hand and an intermittent pulse; one of its conspicuous effects is to develop irritability of the heart; it retards the cell change on which the development of the adolescent depends. There are persons whom it does not seem to injure. The system often becomes so accustomed to the use of a poison that bad effects are not apparent."

BEAUTY CULTURE.

OMAHA.—Hair tonic: Sulphate of quinine, 40 grains; tincture of nux vomica, 2 drams; tincture of capsicum, 1 dram; fluid extract of Jaborandi, 4 drams; spirit of rosemary, 1 ounce; glycerin, 4 drams; rosewater, 8 ounces. Also try massage.

E. K. T.—Strange that persons sensitive about a large nose do not read. This treatment has been repeatedly published: One dram muriate of ammonia, ½ dram tannic acid, 2 ounces glycerin, 3 ounces rosewater. The ammonia and acid are dissolved in the glycerin before the rosewater is added. Apply to nose at night with absorbent cotton; skin is bathed with it through the day. Surgical instrument stores sell clips for large noses. (Or try first-class masseur.)

BEAUTY.—Perhaps the toilet soap used does not agree with the skin. If that is the case, the benefit from using cold cream will be retarded, no matter how fine the cream nor faithful the application. Change the soap or do without it altogether for a time, using the cream to cleanse the skin and when gently wiped off, dust a good talcum powder lightly over the surface to prevent any possibility of a shiny face.

NANCY.—Chief among highly recommended cucumber lotions is cucumber milk from which such hair producing ingredients as spermaceti and white wax are judiciously eliminated. The following formula is an English proprietary cosmetic of popular repute. It tends to contract enlarged pores, to stimulate healthful action of the glands while doing its work as a specific for redness and roughness of the skin, tan and sunburn: Oil of sweet almonds, 4 ounces; fresh cucumber juice, 10 ounces; essence of cucumbers, 3 ounces; white castile soap (powdered), ¼ ounce; tincture of benzoin, 2-3 drams. To save trouble and the possibility of failure that often attends amateur effort, it is well to intrust a druggist with this prescription.

JOE.—Paste for sharpening razors: Carefully mix with melted tallow 30 parts of the finest possible emery flour. If the paste, when cold, is too stiff add a little lard to the tallow to soften it before using. If the emery is not fine enough the paste will prove unsatisfactory. The flexible strop hung at one end by a nail, such as the professional wielder of the razor ordinarily resorts to, gives a strong but not a fine edge. Oil tends to harden the surface of the strop unless frequently applied. A sealskin strop, having a smooth, pliable surface, gives the best edge; and if the razor be dipped into hot water before stropping, the metal is toughened and better fitted for the production of the requisite keen edge. The preliminary immersion in water is a vital factor, since razors possess a finer temper than ordinary cutting tools, and are proportionately brittle. It is also expedient that the strop surface should be preserved from the settling thereon of dust particles, the presence of which, if of a gritty nature, may break the delicate edge of the tool. It is important to remember that the edge of a razor, being obviously of a much finer character, owing to the nature of its work, than other cutting tools, must receive special attention. A Baltimorean writes: It has long been known that the simplest method of sharpening a razor is to put it for half an hour in water to which one-twentieth of its weight of muriatic or sulphuric acid has been added, then lightly wipe it off and after a few hours set it on a hone. The acid here supplies the place of a whetstone by corroding the whole surface uniformly, so that nothing further than a smooth polish is necessary. The process never injures good blades, while badly hardened ones are frequently improved by it. (No razor can be sharpened unless held perfectly flat on hone or stone.)

Kitchener's Victory in Cabinet Upheaval

KITCHENER TRIUMPHS.

Philadelphia Press: Lord Kitchener seems to have triumphed signally in gaining the united support of the British people, coupled with their angry resentment of the virulent attacks on him as Secretary for War, which have been made during the week in the newspapers controlled by Lord Northcliffe. These journals comprise the London Times, the Daily Mail and the Evening News. They have been employed by Northcliffe for months in a continuous campaign to discredit Kitchener as an administrator.

United attacks of the three allied newspapers culminated in charges of incompetence, particularizing Kitchener's insistence on supplying antiquated shrapnel for the forces in France, instead of modern high-power shells. He was also blamed for not having sooner commandeered the various establishments which the Government was obliged later to take over for the manufacture of ammunition. Prior to that the Northcliffe papers criticised Kitchener as a self-advertiser.

Contending that Great Britain should long ago have resorted to conscription they have assailed his advertisements to obtain recruits, notwithstanding the fact that the Northcliffe predictions of Kitchener's failure to raise 2,000,000 men without conscription have proved fallacious. Their latest grievance is the extension of the age limit of recruits to 40 years and Kitchener's decision to accept married men for the army. The persistency of these attacks in three such widely circulated newspaper began to shake public confidence in the Secretary for War. Kitchener has been virtually dictator since the outbreak of hostilities.

At last Northcliffe succeeded through his newspapers in forcing an agreement for a Coalition Ministry, to which another campaign had been directed. Emboldened thereby came the final concerted assault on Kitchener, with the result that there was an instantaneous revulsion of public feeling. On the Stock Exchange and at other public meetings copies of the Northcliffe papers were publicly burned and resolutions of confidence in Kitchener adopted. There has been a great patriotic outburst against Northcliffe for attempting to divide the nation in time of war and destroy confidence in the head of the military organization.

WANTED, A SCAPEGOAT.

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune: Lord Kitchener, who seems to have gained the enmity of an influential portion of the English press, is reaping the rewards of ruthless efficiency. There is nothing at all strange in the fact that Englishmen who 10 months ago hailed him as the potential savior of the country now should demand his crucifixion on the cross of public sentiment. It is obvious, of course, that he is the same Kitchener today he was then. The change has been in the attitude of the persons who criticise him. They went into the war with an exaggerated idea of values, expecting the enemy to melt away before the onslaughts of the army and navy. The fact that there was woeful lack of preparation does not appeal to them at all. They simply see the lack of satisfactory results. The German army still is in Flanders and many ships of the navy and of the commercial fleet have gone to the bottom. Naturally the public looks for a "goat," and who is more available than Kitchener!

That is one trouble with the fickle populace. Physical impossibilities cheerfully are cut out for the hero of the hour, and when he fails to live up to the popular ideal set for him the crowd is ready to turn and rend him.

NORTHCLIFFE DISCREDITED.

Philadelphia Record: Lord Kitchener is finding champions as well as assailants in the English press. There are judges of public opinion who believe him to be stronger than he was before the papers controlled by Lord Northcliffe opened fire upon him. His notion that his prime duty was not to furnish news to the papers is warmly seconded by some of the London press, who enlarge on his extraordinary achievements in creating a vast army, training it into efficiency and supplying it with weapons and ammunition. The attack upon him is described by the London Chronicle as "the blackmailing plot of the Conservatives."

KITCHENER AND McCLELLAN.

Philadelphia Record: Earl Kitchener's present experience is not unlike that of Gen. McClellan in our Civil War. McClellan took a lot of new recruits and made the Army of the Potomac out of them. The process took a deal of time, and McClellan was severely criticised, but his work was so well done that the Generals, or some of them, at least, who followed him were able to lead the army to victories. Kitchener has done a great work, even though he may have committed some mistakes. From this distant point of view it would seem a terrible mistake for Great Britain to allow him to be pushed out of office by the present noisy clamor against him.

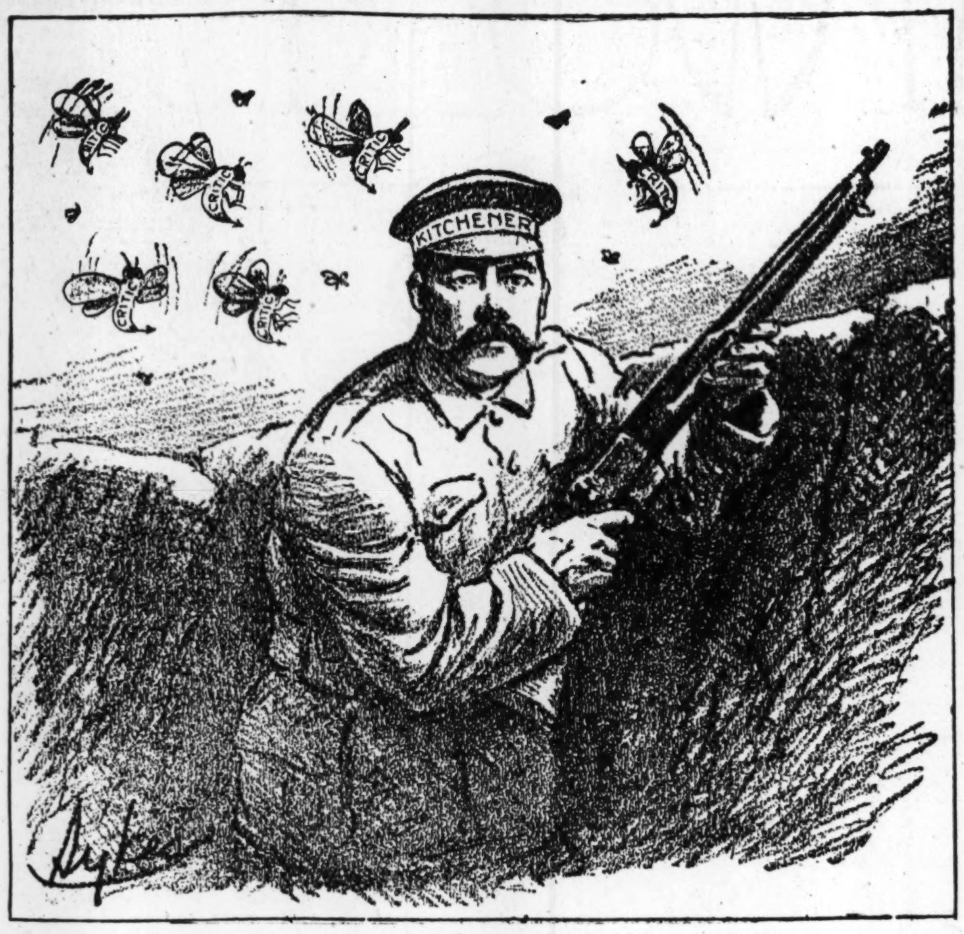
FOOLING THE COUNTRY.

Pittsburg Leader: The blow up of the British Cabinet, which has set the country into a ferment, is only the advance guard of a situation with which the masses of the people will have to deal with their own hands when the war is ended. If it is serious now, it will probably loom much larger then.

While the reason given out for popular consumption is that the Government wants to unite the empire through a unity of the political parties, there is another reason that is stronger, though so far kept from the British public. That is that the Liberal party, and all others, are picking out a good spot on which to drop when the war is over, regardless of how it terminates.

With all the parties making up the Government there will be no overwhelming, crushing responsibility for any single party, and at the same time no wildly enthusiastic acclaim of any single party. The country does not yet see, but may come to get a glimpse of it, that this war, whatever may be the diplomatic explanations, is not fought in the interest of the British people, especially those who will be asked to pay the bills. The party that fights this war, no matter how it ends, will not be a popular party when peace is re-established.

The cry that this war is to save the life of the nation and the lives of the nation's working class will answer well enough while the air is filled with powder smoke, but not when men have leisure to think things over, and mark what have been the practical results of the war.



BZZ—Z—Z—Z.

—Sykes in Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

U. S. Dollar Supreme

Boston Post: The English pound sterling, worth in normal times $4.86 2-3, was quoted last week at $4.78, the lowest price ever recorded. This means, roughly, that English money is worth at present time only 98 cents on the dollar in our market. Whereas ordinarily it takes 5.18 1-8 French francs to make a dollar of our money, it now takes 5.43; and whereas the normal value of four German marks is 95 1-5 cents, they are now quoted at 83, a discount of 3 cents on each mark.

The reason for this depreciation in the value of the European currencies is obvious. For months these countries, especially England and France, have been buying heavily of our goods and have not been offsetting these purchases as in normal times by the sale of goods to us. The fall in the exchange rates against these nations, therefore, indicates that they must settle for the big balances of purchases in gold. They have been doing this in part, some $70,000,000 of gold having been turned back to the United States from foreign countries since Jan. 1.

But this is a small portion of the amount actually owing to us and what will be owed soon. The big war orders, running into the hundreds of millions of dollars, which are now being turned out by our manufacturers, have not begun to affect the foreign exchanges yet, as the bills not fall due until the goods are ready for shipment weeks and months hence.

When these bills fall due Europe must arrange for a more satisfactory basis of settlement. The cost of the war is staggering enough under any circumstances, and the warring nations cannot afford to pay their bills here in money that has to stand a discount of two and three cents on the dollar.

There are three ways in which they can check the depreciation in the value of their money to us: Send the gold, sell our securities back to us or borrow. They can ill spare the gold, while we have more than we need. Securities they are selling in some volume, but the only effective means is to borrow until after the war, when they can settle in gold.

Being a creditor of Europe is a new sensation for us. It means that we are in the strongest financial position in our history.

The Barnes vs. Roosevelt Verdict

A DRAWN BATTLE.

Philadelphia Inquirer: Mr. Barnes insists upon the rectitude of his conduct throughout, and his principal defense was that Roosevelt himself was the boss of New York politics. This seems to have been proved, but it did not help Barnes. Neither man emerges from the trial with an increased reputation. Both are more or less discredited. Col. Roosevelt managed to get a great deal of much-desired publicity and to restate his views time after time in a way that must have tickled his vanity. Mr. Barnes was shown to have been a machine leader much approved by Roosevelt as his "Dear Bill" until he refused to follow the Colonel into the new camp. Then he became a sordid and corrupt politician as distinguished from such angelic natures as Bill Flinn of Pittsburg, who was true to the Colonel and kept his reputation.

Altogether, as already remarked, it seems to have been a drawn battle, with the Colonel gaining only in a front-page publicity which had been adumbrated of late by the war news.

EFFECT ON BARNES.

New York Tribune: Mr. Barnes' case in court crumbled. Mr. Barnes politically crumbles. The political order which Mr. Barnes believes in so thoroughly, so aggressively, is crumbling before the views and activities of the young men of today. Bourbonism cannot prevail in the twentieth century. The Tribune's paragrapher repeats his previous comment: "Some politicians who are dead become statesmen. Others bring libel suits."

NARROW ESCAPE FOR T. R.

Pittsburgh Gazzette-Times: Notwithstanding the verdict it is apparent from the length and nature of the trial that Col. Roosevelt, if he had not actually crossed the line of privilege, had so nearly done so that only by extraordinary means could he escape liability for spoken words. That is not a particularly admirable course for a former President to pursue. The occcasion is desperate and a protagonist in doubtful case when it is necessary to stigmatize in order to win. And that is not the sort of business one in Col. Roosevelt's position before the public ought to be engaged in, especially when the other fellow had aforetime been a bosom friend.

BOTH MEN "BOSSES."

Philadelphia Record: Aside from its publicity value, the verdict does not amount to much. Doubtless Barnes could have proved Roosevelt a boss to the satisfaction of an equally intelligent, if slow-minded, jury. Theodore and William are tarred with the same stick. The washing of dirty Republican linen is always encouraging to Democrats.

EVIDENCE INCONCLUSIVE.

Philadelphia Press: Had Mr. Barnes been a defendant on the charges made by Col. Roosevelt he probably would have been acquitted on the evidence adduced at this trial, but the inconclusiveness of the evidence of corruption on the part of Mr. Barnes was not sufficient to convince the jury that Col. Roosevelt was at fault in making it.

He undoubtedly believed the charge himself and spoke what he believed to be the truth. He was supported in his belief by a number of circumstances which on their face were suspicious. Most opinions are founded on evidence much less convincing, but it is dangerous to publish or proclaim them without much confirmatory proof. But the jury would not consent to punish Col. Roosevelt for his uttered opinions, even if he was mistaken. His personality to the jury must have had great weight with that jury, as it has with every audience before which he appears, and probably contributed even more than his witnesses and the able argument of his counsel to the verdict for the defendant.

LEAVES ROOSEVELT UNCRUSHED.

Washington Times: There never was much chance of Barnes getting a verdict for libel against Mr. Roosevelt, but for a man who had been so long and so conspicuously in the public eye as Mr. Roosevelt there might well be a good chance—many chances, most likely—of finding damaging records against him. So the suit was brought, more, it would seem, for the purpose of crushing Roosevelt forever, disposing of him for good and all, than with any very sanguine hope of recovering the $50,000 for wounded feelings.

With these double purposes, and with access to all the Platt correspondence, and with an intimate knowledge of the political history of the State for a quarter of a century, the suit looked like a good thing.

But obviously Mr. Barnes forgot himself and the holes in his own armor plate. He was so intent on going after Roosevelt and on eliminating him from public life—a piece of work he, Barnes, regarded as cut out for him to do—that he overlooked the vulnerable points in his own somewhat fervid political career.

MAY BURY THE HATCHET.

New York Times: "There will be a heavy bill of costs for both parties to the suit, and no compensating gains. The loss will be in pocket, not in reputation. Possibly, when the Colonel in future feels moved to the act of literary composition he will choose other subjects than the political doings of William Barnes. And some day, we are confident, the vicissitudes of politics will bring Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Barnes together. There will be a moment of constraint, then mutual smiles, they will shake hands and the hatchet so viciously brandished in court will be buried out of the sight of men."

A POPULAR VERDICT.

Philadelphia Ledger: The finding went the Colonel's way because the people stand ready to forgive a few ethical discrepancies and inconsistencies to the red-blooded Americanism of one who on the whole has fought a good, clean fight for common decency in the political life of this country. Of course, Roosevelt owed a great deal to the helping hand of Platt—but he did not wear the collar of humiliating servility. However, the man in the street approves the course of one who stands and fights for his honor when challenged. Almost every failing, first and last, has been ascribed to the Colonel, but it has never yet been said that he lacked cour

Golf Tournament—Men at Glen Echo, and Women at Bellerive—List of Entrants Reads Like Pages From the Social Register. Many Weddings to Take Place During Week. "Runaway" Marriage of Miss Carol Miller Causes Surprise in Smart Set. Miss Katherine Peddle Announces Engagement to Robert Abeles II.

By Frances Cabanne Scovel.

GOLF will be the most interesting subject this week, and around the two tournaments—one for women at Bellerive, the other for men at Glen Echo—most of the social activities will center.

The match is for the State championship. Noted players from all over the State and all the local cracks are entered. The list reads like a social register, and in spite of a number of important weddings those two charming spots will be gay with luncheon, tea and dinner parties.

THE announcement of the engagement of Miss Katherine Peddle and Robert Abeles II, which was made yesterday at a luncheon and the news of which was published in the Post-Dispatch, is one of the most interesting of the large number of betrothals recently made known.

It is said in St. Louis a girl does not usually have a very good time—a "wonderful time"—after her first season; that it is a case of "The King is dead; long live the King!"

When she ceases to be a debutante she either takes up social service work, some kind of civic business or goes to college to study some "ology." But that was not the case with Miss Peddle. Even the announcing and breaking of another engagement, now forgotten, made no difference in her popularity, and she has been as much in demand by the young matrons as by the younger set of belles and beaux.

She often is spoken of as a beauty, and was one of the prettiest girls of her debutante year.

The luncheon was given by Mrs. Peddle, who, by the way, is Miss Katherine's stepmother, and two more devoted women are rarely seen.

The guests at the luncheon were Misses Oneida O'Hara, Martha Pittman, Gertrude McLeod, Ina Morris, Mrs. Howard V. Stephens and Mrs. William Stephens, formerly of Mobile, Ala. The marriage will be in October.

Miss Peddle is the daughter of Charles E. Peddle, who came here from Indianapolis about 10 years ago. Mr. Abeles is the son of Julius D. Abeles of 4140 Washington boulevard.

IN the midst of all the formal announcements of engagements and conventional weddings, Miss Carol Miller's run-away marriage to Hayward Gatch in East St. Louis Thursday was a variant bit of news. The announcement of their engagement would hardly have been a surprise as rumor has been very busy with their names for more than a year—but an elopement!

"Why did they do it?" asks one.

"Just think of what a wonderful wedding she misses!" remarks another.

"Think of all the presents she did not get!" laments someone else.

"What possible objection could there have been?" asks still another. (Isn't it funny what a flurry an unconventional act causes persons who do not know you?)

Well, to begin with the last of the questions first, the answers go something like this:

The only "objection" to the match was that the bride was the only and much adored daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gilman Miller, who, like most parents, disliked to give their big, little girl up just when they had got her back after she had been away at school for about four years, two of which were spent in Europe.

She is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. O'Fallon, whose other grandchildren are all boys. Despite all the pettings and pampering that were showered upon her for this as a reason, there is not a more unspoiled nor more gracious girl in society. So when she determined to do something unconventional it naturally became a three-day's wonder.

As for the wedding, it surely would have been a grand affair, because the O'Fallon clan is large and wealthy and always does things that way. It is rumored that this is one of the reasons the bride decided to wed quietly.

As for the presents, she will probably get them anyway.

The bride is a girl of unusual dignity of bearing. She is a pianist of more than ordinary merit, and a linguist. She was educated here and at Dobbs Ferry, and was for two years at Les Marronniers, near Paris. Each summer her parents joined her abroad to travel during summer months.

She made her debut winter before last, but quite late in the season, and her "first winter" was interrupted by the death of Mr. Miller's grandmother, so that last winter really was her first full season, which she began by being one of the special maids to the Queen at the Veiled Prophet ball.

Mr. Gatch is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Elias S. Gatch. He is a cousin of Kennett Farrar Burnes, and his mother, who was Miss Katherine Burnes, was one of the heirs to the Burnes estate, the division of which attracted nation-wide interest.

He is an Amherst College man and a member of the younger set. His sister, Miss Katherine Gatch, will marry Lockwood Hill in the autumn.

Mr. Gatch and his bride have gone West to spend their honeymoon. They will make their home here.

WOMEN SHAVE UNKNOWINGLY

When women are so unwise as to use so-called hair removers, they actually shave unknowingly because such preparations stimulate hair growth after each removal.

The proper way to remove hair is to devitalize it. It is impossible to accomplish this result with pastes and rub-on preparations, because they only remove hair from the surface of the skin. De Miracle, the original liquid depilatory, devitalizes hair by attacking it under the skin as well as on the skin.

Imitations of De Miracle are as worthless as pastes and rub-on preparations, because they lack certain ingredients that De Miracle alone contains, which give it the power to rob hair of its vitality—its life sustaining force.

Buy a bottle of the genuine De Miracle today, and you will get the original liquid hair remover. Others are worthless imitations—refuse them. Remember, you are not asked to buy De Miracle on a mere promise of your money being refunded. De Miracle is the only depilatory that has a binding guarantee in each package, which entitles you to the refund of your money if it fails.

De Miracle is sold in three sizes, 50c, $1.00 and $2.00 bottles. The larger sizes are the most economical for dermatologists and large users to buy. If your dealer will not supply you, order direct from us. The truth about the treatment of superfluous hair mailed in plain sealed envelope on request. De Miracle Chemical Co., Dept. D., Park Av. and 130th St., New York.

HAIR SUNBURNS AS MUCH AS THE SKIN

Remember that to dry the hair in the sun is disastrous, for the hair when wet will fade and change color just as the skin becomes tanned or burned. Sunshine and fresh air are both fine hair tonics, but not hot sunshine on wet or damp hair. Not until you have thoroughly dried your tresses after a shampoo are you ready to give them their sunbath. And, too, it is imperative that you be very careful in choosing your cleansing preparation, and never use cleansers made for all purposes, but instead get some good mixture made expressly for shampooing the hair and stimulating its growth. You can enjoy the best that is known by getting a package of Canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.—ADV.

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVANCE TODAY AND TOMORROW

Holiday for Schools and Banks and for Courts and City Hall.

Memorial Day will be observed today and the observance will be continued tomorrow, which will be a holiday because Memorial day comes on Sunday.

The schools, courts, banks and the City Hall will be closed tomorrow and many business houses will close at noon.

The First Regiment, Missouri National Guard, will observe the occasion today by marching to O'Fallon Park and holding exercises there, which consist of music by the band, national songs by school children and the soldiers, and a memorial address by Chaplain Thomas E. Sherman, a son of Gen. Sherman of Civil War fame.

The Line of March.

The line of march will be north on Grand avenue from the Armory to Fairground Park, west through the park to Fair avenue, north on Fair avenue to O'Fallon Park and through the park to the pavilion, where arms will be stacked and the regiment will rest during the memorial services.

Col. Arthur B. Donnelly, commanding the regiment, will have squads detailed from the different battalions of the regiment to decorate the graves of soldiers in adjacent cemeteries.

At 3 o'clock the regiment will proceed to Fairground Park, where a regimental parade and review will be tendered Brigadier-General John B. O'Meara, after which the regiment will return to the armory for dismissal.

The grave of former Gov. Thomas C. Fletcher, in Bellefontaine Cemetery, and the graves of other soldiers in Bethany, St. Peter's, Zion, Salem and Valhalla cemeteries will be decorated today by members of the Gen. Lyon Post. No. 2, G. A. R., and the Gen. C. D. Wolf Camp No. 5, Sons of Veterans.

Army Buglers Will Sound Taps.

A special memorial service will be held at 3:30 p. m. in the New St. Marcus Cemetery, under the auspices of the new St. Marcus Evangelical Church and the Lyon post and Wolff camp. Taps will be sounded by army buglers.

Col. Meumann and Col. Hassendeubel post, G. A. R., and their women's auxiliaries and Gen. Rassieur Camp, Sons of Veterans, will have memorial services at 8 p. m., at Jesus Evangelical Church, Twelfth and Victor streets. The Rev. William F. Simon will deliver the memorial sermon. Patriotic services will be led by the comrades. There will be special music by the choir. The church will be decorated with the national colors.

Mushlsiepen Council, No. 941, Knights of Columbus, will decorate the graves of deceased members. The members will meet at the Florissant avenue gate of Calvary Cemetery at 10 a. m. today. This will be the first time in St. Louis that a council of this order has visited a cemetery on Decoration day in a body. The Rev. Father Tracy will conduct the services.

St. Louis Elks will assemble at the upper gate of Bellefontaine Cemetery, on Florissant avenue, at 2:30 p. m. They will march at 3 o'clock, headed by a band, and Elks Troop No. 9, Boy Scouts, to Elks' Rest, where there will be exercises. The program will consist of music by the band, ritualistic service, invocation by Dr. W. W. Graves, song by the Elks' Temple Quartet, memorial address by Mayor Kiel, decoration of graves, song by quartet, closing ode, benediction and the singing of "America."

The main postoffice and stations will close at noon tomorrow. Morning deliveries will be made. The collection service will be less than usual, but sufficient for the requirements.

NEW JITNEY BILL PROHIBITS CHARGE OF OVER 25 CENTS

Measure Introduced by Alderman Hart Requires License Renewal Every Three Months.

Alderman Luke E. Hart Friday introduced two bills to regulate jitney busses which omits many of the stringent regulations in the bill introduced a week before by Alderman Koenig. Jitney operators say the Koenig bill would put them out of business.

The Hart bill requires a license renewal every three months for jitney cars, and makes it compulsory for drivers to obtain a separate license after examination by city officials. No charge in excess of 25 cents will be permitted by licensed cars, and cars may take on and discharge passengers at the far side of street intersections. The Koenig bill forbade jitneys stopping within 125 feet of a street intersection.

How You May Change Your Face Completely

Any woman not satisfied with her complexion can easily remove it and have a new one. The thin veil of stifling half-dead cuticle is an encumbrance and should be removed to give the fresh, vigorous, young skin underneath a chance to show itself and to breathe. There's a simple, old-fashioned remedy which will always do the work. Get an ounce of pure mercolized wax from your druggist and apply it at night like cold cream, washing it off in the morning. The wax will gently absorb all the lifeless skin and leave a healthy and beautiful complexion, as fresh as a child's. Naturally it takes with it all such facial blemishes as freckles, tan, moth patches, sallowness, liver spots, pimples. It is pleasant to use, and economical. The face so treated soon looks years younger.

To keep the skin free from wrinkles, there's nothing quite so good as the old reliable saxolite lotion. It is only necessary to dissolve an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel and bathe the face in this as required.

DeLacy's
Cin-Ko-Na and Iron

Gives definite results in treating pimples, eruptions, blotches and other diseases of the blood, also increases the appetite by its tonic action on the stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels. It is prepared with the same exacting care that is used in putting up a prescription. All druggists sell it in large 16-ounce bottles for $1.00.

A Remedy for All Pain

"The efficiency of any drug," says Dr. C. P. Robbins, "is known to us by the results we obtain from its use. If we are able to control pain and disease by means of any preparation, we certainly are warranted in its use. One of the principal symptoms of all diseases is pain, and this is what the patient most often applies to us for, i. e., something to relieve his pain. If we can arrest this promptly, the patient is most liable to trust in us for the other remedies which will effect a permanent cure. One remedy which I have used largely in my practice is Anti-kamnia Tablets. Many and varied are their uses. I have put them to the test on many occasions, and have never been disappointed. I found them especially valuable for headaches of malarial origin, where quinine was being taken. They appear to prevent the bad after-effects of the quinine. Anti-kamnia Tablets are also excellent for the headaches from improper digestion; also for headaches of a neuralgic origin. Two Anti-kamnia Tablets give prompt relief, and in a short time the patient is able to go about as usual." These tablets may be obtained at all druggists. Ask for A-K Tablets. They are also unexcelled for headaches, neuralgia and all

Why Drag Through Life Wearing Worthless Trusses?

90% of the Suffering and Trouble Ruptured People Go Through Is Caused by Spring and Leg-Strap Trusses.

Aren't you sick and tired of wearing trusses you can't make hold, which you can't feel safe in, or which hurt so they scarcely give you a minute's peace?

Don't you know that such contraptions will sooner or later let your rupture get the best of you?

Don't you know they are almost sure to cripple you up, so you wont be able to keep at work, won't be able to make a living?

Arent you afraid theyll gradually let you get so bad that sooner of later you'll have to face a dangerous operation?

Aren't you willing to make a sixty-day test—without having to risk a cent—and see for yourself what a relief it is to get rid of such misery-causing makeshifts?

No More Belts, Leg-Straps or Springs

We have found a way to hold any man's rupture without harmful pressure, without any belts or spring around your waist, without having to wear leg-straps.

It is our guaranteed rupture holder. It is as big an improvement over elastic and spring trusses and so-called "appliances" as the modern locomotive is over the first steam engine ever built.

60 Days' Trial to Prove It

We have so much faith in it—have seen what it has done for so many others—that we are willing to make one especially for your case and send it to you for sixty days' trial. Willing to give you plenty of time to see for yourself just how good it is.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or from bothering you in any way, then you can send it back and it won't cost you a single penny.

It is the only thing we know of for rupture that you can get on long enough trial to make sure; because the only thing good enough to stand a long and thorough test.

All About It in Free Book

Don't send any money. Just write for our free book—cloth bound, 20 separate articles, 96 pages—and find out everything you want to know. It is full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why operation is nearly always a gamble with death and why those who manage to live through it often have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the fakes and humbugs—puts you on guard against being fooled and against throwing money away.

And it tells all about our guaranteed rupture holder—the famous Cluthe. Shows how simple it is. Why it needs no belt or leg-straps. How it instantly and automatically protects you against every strain, so your rupture can't be forced out. How it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture. How it has brought complete cure in thousands of cases that seemed almost hopeless. How it is water-proof and will hold in the bath. How you can get it on 60 days' trial and how little it costs if you keep it.

Explains the care and attention we give you and why, because of our long experience and thorough knowledge of rupture, we are successful in cases that would utterly baffle your local truss fitters.

Write for the book today. That will take only a minute. But it may free you from trouble and worry for the rest of your life.

How War Will Change Europe's Mode of Living

lines, where the sound of the cannon is not heard, men and women are working with a tranquility that has not been known for some time, and they no longer complain of destiny, although that destiny has become much harder. That furious desire to possess and enjoy, that made men impossible to staisfy, has all of a sudden disappeared. The French have learned the virtue of patience and no longer speak badly of their Government; the Germans have learned the virtue of sobriety and eat little—who would have dared predict it? The world has changed.

Human Nature Is Finding Itself.

How can this most singular phenomena be explained? This sort of miracle? How is it that those who had no peace when they were enjoying themselves as they'd like to; who were always complaining of not possessing enough, not enjoying themselves as they'd like; who always thought they were going to be ruined—how is it that they are now tranquil and content, now that they really are on the verge of ruin? Perhaps human nature has changed? No; it has rather found itself. Many people are today glad to be freed of many responsibilities and obligations that were forced on them by an opulent peace; glad to be able to live simply, as they like, earning less, spending less—so working less.

They are no longer forced to pass all the days of the week on that instrument of torture—the automobile, tearing crazily along the great streets of the world. They are glad to be able to dispense with a lot of different "pleasures" without being dishonored; pleasures that, because they were obligatory, hung on them like loads; trips, banquets, receptions, ceremonies; they are glad they are no longer condemned to the tyranny of three or four "sports"—costly, tiring and tiresome.

Time and fatigue are not only necessary to earn money, but also to spend it. We can't enjoy ourselves without effort, so he who wants to enjoy himself too much finally gets tired. The times in which we live that command each one of us to earn and spend as much as we can, imposes a double fatigue on us. And not all of us really put up with that double fatigue voluntarily. So there are many who, in the midst of the sorrows and anxieties of war, feel the joy of a brief rest and breathing spell; that joy of working less and living more peacefully, that our generations seemed not to know.

The people have taken all the more readily to this more simple and reposeful life because the change has been universal. In many periods, but especially in our time, many human needs and desires were born of imitation and emulation. Every one desires a certain amount of wealth, aspires to certain luxuries, comforts and pleasures, not because they really would be unhappy if deprived of them, but because they do not want to be different from the people they live near and know, nor appear to have less than they have. So until a year ago men vied with each other, seeking to desire and enjoy more and more; and few indeed were the wise ones with enough strength of will not to annoy and torment themselves with the thought that perhaps they were not enjoying themselves as much as their neighbors.

War Is Enforcing Simplicity.

The war has forced everybody or almost everybody, to live simply, so nobody now wants many things that a year ago seemed indispensable to his happiness.

So Europe has changed in a few months; has given up that mad desire for riches and pleasure which so agitated her one year ago. Europe has become patient and unpretentious, which is to say, as I claimed on the temperance question, without knowing it the people have returned to the old system of living. It is only two centuries ago that man became so dissatisfied, so difficult to please.

Until two centuries ago, all relations and all philosophies taught that man had to know how to hold his desires within the bounds of moderation; that he should not presume too much on his own power; that he should limit his aspirations; he should live simply, consume less riches, treasure the gifts that God and Nature had placed at his disposal. Since science, America, steam and the idea of liberty have increased man's confidence in his own power, he has overthrown all these principles.

Man is now considered to be more perfect according to how much he knows, possesses and enjoys; so he must strive to get rich, to increase his dominion of nature, to multiply his needs, to make more and more powerful the tools and instruments he uses. So men have become dissatisfied because they only consider each point they reach as a stepping stone to other points more than more distant.

We Were Unhappy With Everything.

So was born the strangest, the most singular mental disease with which the world was ever visited. There never was a time in history, richer, more knowing or more powerful than that in which we were born and which lasted until Aug. 1, 1914. All the most glorious ages of the past were poor, ignorant and little compared to the 20 years that preceded the European war. We had everything—wealth, knowledge, liberty, peace, safety, order. We should have been happy.

No age, however, ever complained so much of destiny and the world. On every side reformers sprang up to improve it. From all sides came laments, recriminations, criticisms that spared no one human or divine. Above all was heard the lament of too small earnings. The world was never so rich, from the highest to the lowest, yet men, with few exceptions, never complained so much of how little they earned and how little they had.

The European war was needed to cure man of this malady and to guide him back to temperance. And as the European war has closed many manufactories and shops selling intoxicating drinks, so has it taken away from our minds so many of the impatient and exigent tendencies that tormented us without respite. But have they gone to stay? Will the old discontent, anxious only to make and enjoy, come back when peace returns to Europe? Or will the world live simply for a generation or two and only take up again, little by little, that costly, ill-bred luxury, that insane desire for velocity, the fury for superficial pleasures with which Europe was running mad until the breaking out of the war?

Simplicity Will Last Long Time.

It would be impossible today to answer this. Only facts can do so. But it is not too much to suppose that the effects of this moral and mental revolution will last in Europe after the war, that one or two generations at least will now be disposed to live more simply and be contented more easily with that which destiny allows. The generations that have seen and gone through the terrible trial in Europe cannot help understanding that in the modern idea of earning and spending, of enjoying without limit, there is something forced, that doesn't respond to the deep needs of human nature. As in every civilization there are the priviledged ones and the victims, in the modern civilization the priviledged ones are those who can work much and rapidly without tiring themselves, and who are in a work not disagreeable to them. But how many have to push themselves beyond their strength, moreover working at something which to them is distasteful, even repugnant!

These are the real victims of our civilization. All the wealth and pleasure which our period of existence can give them cannot console them for the continual inward suffering, forced on them by a labor too heavy and too hard.

And perhaps the day is breaking when our century will find itself compelled to have more regard for these victims, until yesterday unhappily buried under the happiness and triumph of the priviledged.

(Next Sunday Prof. Ferrero will discuss the changes in letters, art, politics and religion that the war will bring.)

HUCKSTER LEAVES WAGON, GOES INTO HOME AND KILLS SELF

After Waiting Two Hours, Boy Who Held Team Finds Man Dead in House, Pistol by His Side.

John C. Meyer, 37 years old, a huckster, shot and killed himself yesterday at his home, 3529A Cherokee street, while his wagon, loaded with produce, stood in front of the house.

Meyer went to market and purchased a stock of goods. Returning to his home about 8:30 a. m., he left Elmer Etzel, 15 years old, of 3458 South Compton avenue, in charge of the wagon and went into the house. After waiting two hours for Meyer to return, the boy went to the home of Meyer's sister, Mrs. Mary Smith of 3224 Miami street.

They went to Meyer's home and found him dead on the floor with a wound in his head and the revolver beside him. No one else was in the house. Mrs. Smith said she knew of no cause for her brother's act.

Blood Risings Begin A Mere Speck

Stop Them From Growing Large and Dangerous.

Nearly everyone who uses S. S. S. for the blood recalls a friend who went through untold suffering as the result of a mere pimple or small blood rising. A host of people did not realize, until too late, what may result from a slight skin abrasion. But they recovered if they used S. S. S., and in almost every village and hamlet, every crossroad and away back off the road is someone who will tell you how S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, restored his health.

It is a most interesting fact that this remarkable vegetable medicine overhauls the blood in a manner that excites curious minds.

But it acts in accordance with accepted physiological laws and yet its effect is almost beyond comprehension to those who are wedded to such drugs as mercury, calomel, arsenic, iodide of potash, copper and other baneful influences which all the world bears silent testimony to their destructive tendencies.

S. S. S. is indeed a nature's tribute to what we need and it is worthy of note that in almost any drug store throughout the country you will find it regularly in stock. Get a bottle today. And if you believe yours is a peculiar case, write to the Medical Adviser of the Swift Specific Co., 106 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Our word for it, he is one of Georgia's appreciated specialists, retired from active practice but proud of his name and of his recognized ability.

Item Welcomed by Many Men

This will prove a welcome bit of information for all those who are overworked, gloomy, despondent, nervous and have trembling limbs, heart palpitation, dizziness, cold extremities, insomnia, fear without cause, timidity in venturing and general inability to act naturally and rationally as others do, because the treatment, consisting of grain tablets, can be obtained and taken without the knowledge of any one. If the reader has any of the symptoms, and decides to try it, just go to any large, well-stocked drug store and ask for three-grain Cadomene Tablets, and then take according to the directions which accompany each sealed tube. The tonic-invigorating power is soon felt and the joy of a healthy body experienced. These tablets originally dispensed by prominent physicians and pharmacists, now are packed with full directions for self administration, so that it is wholly unnecessary to pay a physician for prescribing them.—ADVERTISEMENT.

Edison Will Work on War Devices Only to Aid U. S.

Western Union in Boston, but resigned to carry out experiments on duplex transmission, which led to inventions saving his old employers $500,000 a year in construction.

Twelve Hundred Inventions.

From the time of his first patent for a vote-recording machine, taken out in Boston when he was 21, up to date, Edison has patented more than 1200 different inventions, which is about 25 inventions every year, or more than two a month. But it was not until 1870 that he received his first big money—he got $40,000 for a telegraph ticker device.

Edison at once opened up a manufacturing shop at Newark, and, during the next six years, worked on and completed many inventions. He assisted Sholes, the inventor of the typewriter, to make a successful working model and his own work included the motograph, automatic telegraph systems, multiplex telegraph systems and parafine paper, the carbon rheostat, microtastimeter for detecting minute changes in temperature, etc.

In 1876 he moved from Newark to his laboratory at Menlow Park, N. J., and there he invented many devices which have transformed modern business and added greatly to the pleasure of life. The carbon telephone transmitter, one of the principal factors that transformed the telephone from scientific toy to a practical commercial success, was invented in 1877; the same year saw the advent of the phonograph, the patent for which was issued less than 60 days after application without a single reference—more a tribute to the inventor than to his patent lawyer.

Invents Incandescent Light.

The following year Edison began work on the electric problem. Oct. 21, 1879, he made the first incandescent electric lamp and it burned for 40 hours, during the whole of which time Edison sat in front of it with his eyes glued on the tiny filament of light running along a piece of carbonized thread. By substituting a thread of cellulose he produced a light that was commercially practical and on the last day of the year 700 of the new lamps were strung along the streets of Menlow Park and brought train loads of people from New York to see what was rightly considered a modern miracle.

During the same year Edison had invented radical improvements in dynamo electric mechanics, making them suitable for the generation and distribution of current for light, heat and power. He also invented sockets, switches and systems for the measurement of electric currents. Further improvements in electric light were made during the following year and steps were taken to introduce the new invention commercially.

In 1880 Edison invented the magnetic core separator. The following year he began the installation of the first life-size electric railway for freight and passengers at Menlow Park and in 1882, Sept. 4, he commenced the operation of the first commercial station for the distribution of electric current for light, heat and power in New York.

Making a Machine Talk.

The next five years Edison worked from 18 to 20 hours a day and took out more than 300 patents, many of which were of fundamental importance. This period saw the conception of a talking machine. In 1887 Edison moved to his present laboratory at West Orange, N. J., and improved the cylinder phonograph, on which he took out more than 80 patents in four years.

The motion picture camera was invented in 1891 and this mechanism, with the continuous tape-like film invented by Edison, made possible the moving pictures which today provide cheap and wholesome entertainment for hundreds of millions of people. Edison then was 54, at the very zenith of his power, and he devoted the next nine years to the great iron ore concentrating enterprise which has done so much for the steel industry.

Then he turned his attention to the storage battery and invented and introduced commercially the Edison alkaline battery, which he has continued to improve until last month when, after more than seven years of labor and the expenditure of $2,000,000, he finally evolved his nickel-iron alkaline battery, which has been adopted for use in the submarines of the United States navy.

During the last 15 years invention has succeeded invention. He revolutionized the Portland cement industry, introduced the dictaphone and worked on the disc phonograph, finally producing an instrument which reproduces all overtones. Among his latest inventions are the kinetophone, or talking motion picture; the transophone, a new type of dictating machine operated electrically from the keyboard of the typewriter; the telescribe, a device to be attached to telephone by means of which both sides of a telephone conversation are recorded on a phonograph cylinder and may be preserved for future use.

When the war in Europe broke out, England and Germany stopped the exportation of carbolic acid, which they use to make ammunition. Edison, who uses it to make phonograph records, was faced by the necessity of closing down his factory. He devised a means of making the stuff systematically, worked three gangs of men 24 hours a day to build a plant, and on the eighteenth day after breaking ground his factory was turning out his acid. It is now making more than a ton a day.

Has Had Many Lawsuits.

Edison has not always been left in peaceful possession of the products of his genius. Usually, when he patented an invention there were a number of other folk who discovered that it was really theirs. They didn't know it, as a general rule, until they saw the Edison patent, and then they tore their hair and went to law and spent a deal of money, caused a lot of trouble, made the lawyers rich, made themselves poor—and invariably lost their suit.

But all through his suits at law the inventor maintained his usual calm, un-

The Most Thrilling Tale of Arctic Adventure Ever Written

Told by one of the few survivors of Stefansson's expedition which went to explore an unknown continent and search for a reported race of blond Esquimaux.

The ship Karluk, crushed by the ice in the long winter night, sank in a few hours· the crew, with some little clothing and food, tumbled out on the floe; somewhere, hundreds of miles away, they knew Siberia must lie. Can you imagine a situation of greater danger and hardship?

A few of the band of explorers finally made their way back to civilization. Stefansson has never been heard from.

The first chapter of this tremendous epic of Arctic search, never told before, begins in the next

BLANCHE ARRAL.

Madame Blanche Arral, the noted Belgian prima donna, now in this country, has discovered an unique remedy for removing fat without the necessity of resorting to massage or dieting or other weakening and disagreeable processes. She herself grew so stout that she could no longer appear on the stage in her favorite roles. Through the discovery of drinking a certain Javanese Tea she reduced 34 pounds in thirty days. She says as follows:

"Previously I tried without success practically every known method of flesh reduction, including Bath Salts, Starvation Diets, Harsh Purgatives, Massage, Rubber Garments and other weakening, sweating processes, but the result was always the same. Either I did not lose weight, or if I did I lost my health and strength as well. I have recommended this pleasant native Tea to many of my friends, who report reductions just as agreeable and wonderful as my own. The ingredients for some time past have been imported to America, so that now anyone who wishes to try the plan can get the Tea with no trouble and very little expense."

ruffled demeanor. His worst fight was over, perhaps, his greatest invention, the incandescent lamp. There were many folk, of high and low degree, who claimed to have invented the incandescent light long before Edison. But owing to a becoming modesty they had not inflicted it upon the public until "the wizard" started the manufacture of his lamps.

The Sawyer-Mann Co. case, the Westinghouse case and the Goebel case had the press on both sides of the Atlantic up in arms, while the people all over the world wondered if "the wizard" would win, and win he always has. These cases, and the litigation with the Bell Telephone Co. over the Edison receiver and the microphone are the hardest Edison has ever engaged in. The result has always left him more famous than ever.

Every inventor of prominence who came to this country has made a pilgrimage to West Orange to see the wizard of electricity and his wonderful laboratory. To him came Marconi with his wireless telegraph, and Santos Dumont with his flying machine. And so investors of greater and less degree are wont to flock to the master of them all for advice and inspiration. Indeed, with Marconi, as with others, the great master has entered into partnership and lent his matchless genius to their aid. He is admired and loved by all who know him, in business or socially.

Starting Over at 67.

On Dec. 9, 1914, fire wiped out his plant, causing nearly $5,000,000 worth of damage, none of which was covered by insurance, the results of his life work going up in smoke. At 67 years of age Edison started to build over again and he started to do it before the fire was out. In his typical American way all "I am 67 years old, but I am none too old to make a fresh start tomorrow morning. Nobody is ever too old to make a fresh start."

A Message to Thin, Weak, Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 Lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh-building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. Judge & Dolph Drug Co.'s 3 stores, Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., Weipert Drug Co., Johnson-Enderle-Pauley Drug Co.'s 5 stores and other good druggists have Sargol, or can get it from their wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh-builder.—ADV.

School Girls Have Waving, Curly Hair.

USE GLORIOL WAVOLENE.

It's an "awful nuisance" for busy school girls, society young ladies and working girls to keep their hair in curl.

It won't be hard to have curling, wavy hair all the time, if you'll moisten the hair with Gloriol Wavolene each time before applying irons or curlers. This is a clear, invisible liquid which tends to keep the hair in curl, and at the same time makes it soft and fluffy. Astonishing results are derived from its use. You won't have to bother curling the hair every time you want to dress it and this is surely a saving of time and patience.

One application of Gloriol Wavolene will keep the most stubbornly straight hair in curl several days, and where the hair is naturally fluffy and inclined to curl it may be made to last from ten days to two weeks or even longer.

Always use Gloriol Toilet articles. All are pure and harmless and beautifying.—ADVERTISEMENT.

SYMPHONY SOCIETY PLANS TO ENLARGE ORCHESTRA SCOPE

Additional Popular Concerts and Mixture of Familiar Music With Classic Proposed.

The new Board of Management of the St. Louis Symphony Society will consider, within the next few weeks, plans suggested at the Society's annual meeting at the Artists' Guild Friday night, for making the orchestra more an institution of the city.

The Board consists of the society's president, James E. Smith, who was re-elected; the vice presidents, John Fowler, Hanford Crawford, Archer W. Douglas, Hugo A. Koehler, George D. Markham, Mrs. Philip N. Moore and Mrs. W. A. McCandless; the treasurer, Charles W. Moore, and Daniel K. Catlin, Dwight F. Davis, Mrs. Lizzie H. Drey, Mrs. Francis G. Eaton, Mrs. Victor Ehling, Edward A. Faust, Mrs. John C. Fowler, Mrs. Max A. Goldstein, Benjamin Gratz, Richard S. Hawes, Mrs. Breckinridge Jones, Mrs. Claude Kilpatrick, W. J. Kinsella, Ernest R. Kroeger, J. D. Wooster Lambert, W. A. Lippman, Breckinridge Long, Adolph A. Meyer, Mrs. Louis M. McCall, William Cullen McBride, Mrs. Charles Parsons Pettus, Joseph Pulitzer Jr., Oliver F. Richards, Mrs. Horace S. Rumsey, Mrs. Edward H. Semple, Charles P. Senter, Luther Ely Smith, William K. Stanard, Charles A. Stix, Solomon L. Swarts, Mrs. Benjamin J. Taussig and Charles Wiggins.

Two important suggestions at the Artists' Guild meeting were that of Oliver F. Richards, chairman of the Executive Committee, who advocated popular concerts in the Coliseum, with the aid of the Pageant chorus and high school choruses, and that of Mrs. Marcus Harris, backed by George D. Markham, that familiar music be included in the programs of the Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts, as well as in the "pop" programs.

The carrying out of a number of plans for the advancement of the orchestra, and for its greater use and enjoyment by the people at large, depends in part on the raising of the guarantee fund, the amount of which has been fixed at $50,000. This is a larger guarantee than it has been undertaken to raise in any past year, but Richards, Markham and Hanford Crawford reported that encouraging progress had been made toward raising it.

She Dreaded An Operation More Than Anything Else

Tried Fruitola and Traxo and Has Never Since Been Troubled With Gall-stones.

Mrs. Mary E. Franse, whose address is West Point, Neb., Box 411, has written to the Pinus laboratories a very strong endorsement of Fruitola and Traxo. In her letter, Mrs. Franse says: "About ten years ago I was about to undergo an operation for gall-stones when I heard of your medicine. Dreading an operation above everything I determined to try Fruitola and Traxo and have never been sorry I did so, as I have never been troubled wtih gall-stones since."

Fruitola is a powerful lubricant for the intestinal organs, and one dose is usually sufficient to give ample evidence of its efficacy. Following a dose of Fruitola, Traxo should be taken three or four times a day in order to rebuild and restore the system that has been weakened and rundown by constant suffering. It is a splendid tonic, acting on the liver and stomach most beneficially.

MRS. MARY E. FRANSE

In the files of the Pinus laboratories at Monticello, Ill., are many letters gratefully acknowledging the satisfactory results following the use of Fruitola and Traxo. Arrangements have been made for the distribution of these excellent remedies by leading drug stores everywhere. A booklet of special interest to those who suffer from stomach trouble can be obtained free by writing to the Pinus Co., Monticello, Ill.

CHILDREN'S CODE BODY IS NAMED BY THE GOVERNOR

Members Will Revise Missouri Laws Relating to Juveniles.

Gov. Major yesterday appointed 21 members of a children's code commission to draft a complete code of legislation in the interest of children for the next Legislature.

He took this action in response to a request from the State Committee for Social Legislation, representing the united forces for social betterment in the State. Much of the program of protective legislation for children advocated by this committee failed in the last Legislature.

The commission is charged with the duty of revising the laws relating to children in Missouri, harmonizing them and suggesting such new laws as experience shows to be desirable. Missouri is the second State in the Union to appoint a commission to draft a general children's code. Ohio was the first State to prepare such a code, which is now in successsful operation. Several other states have appointed commissions of narrower scope.

A movement is on foot to secure the appointment of such commissions in every State of the Union to be aided in developing uniform laws for children through the Federal Children's Bureau at Washington.

Joint Meeting Planned.

Members of the Missouri Commission will meet others in New York in July to agree upon plans for developing the work throughout the United States.

The expenses of the commission will be met by voluntary contributions, and it is expected that the total amount needed will be within $1000. Much of the actual work of drafting will be done by the departments at the State University, which have already agreed to put their facilities at the commission's disposal. A large amount of information has already been collected.

The members of the commission are: Chairman, Rhodes E. Cave, Judge of the Juvenile Court and former President of the Board of Education, St. Louis.

Secretary, Manley O. Hudson, professor of law, State University, Columbia.

Howard A. Gass, State Superintendent of Schools, Jefferson City.

Edward E. Porterfield, Judge of the Juvenile Court, Kansas City.

D. E. Kennedy, former Judge of the Probate Court, Sedalia.

Mrs. M. A. Clay, Superintendent State Industrial School for Girls, Chillicothe.

Robert C. Clark, Superintendent of the Training School for Boys, Boonville.

James F. Conran, member State Board of Charities and president of Federation of Catholic Societies, St. Louis.

Dr. W. N. Wilson, Superintendent Missouri Colony for the feeble-minded and epileptic, Marshall.

Edwin D. Moore, State Senator, Lamar.

A. Sidney Johnston, State Factory Inspector, St. Louis.

Mrs. W. R. Chivvis, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, St. Louis.

Mrs. J. B. McBride, president of the Missouri Congress of Mothers' Circles and Parent-Teachers' Associations, Springfield.

Mrs. Philip N. Moore, former president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, St. Louis.

Roger N. Baldwin, chairman of the Legislation Committee State Conference for Social Welfare, St. Louis.

William Volker, former member of the Board of Public Welfare, Kansas City.

Mrs. Harry January, secretary of the Consumers' League of Missouri, St. Louis.

L. A. Halbert, Superintendent of the Board of Public Welfare, Kansas City.

Isidor Loeb, professor of political science, State University, Columbia.

Jacob Billikopf, superintendent of the Jewish Educational Institute, Kansas City.

C. A. Ellwood, professor of sociology, State University, Columbia.

Missouri Pacific will restore midnight trains between St. Louis and Kansas City June 1. See special announcement in this paper.

COUNT TOLSTOI'S SON TAKEN AFTER A THRILLING ESCAPE

He and Companions Tunnel Way Out of Austrian Prison; Captured at Trieste.

VIENNA, May 29.—One of the most dintinguished prisoners of war captured by the Austrian and Hungarian forces is a son of the late Count Tolstoi, who was taken in the Carpathians recently, escaped, and now has been retaken.

Young Count Tolstoi was placed in a prison camp at Milovic in Bohemia, but with his companions managed to tunnel his way out. He got as far as Trieste, where he was recognized and seized. The tunnel through which he escaped was about 12 yards long, and was dug almost under the eyes of the guards, from a room to a point outside the wall.

Tolstoi is one of a number of brothers who took the field for Russia, notwithstanding their father's well-known hatred of war and opposition to an alliance with France as likely to bring about a conflict sooner or later.

LIFE GUARD CAPTAIN ELIGIBLES

The Efficiency Board Friday notified Park Commissioner Cunliff that Hugo F. Froelich, 3721 Page boulevard; Charles F. Grimes, 4367 Delmar boulevard, and Gustave Hanssen, 3302 Magnolia avenue, were the highest candidates in the test for captaincy of the lifeguards at Fairground swimming pool.

Three others competed and made high grades, but the position must be awarded to one of the first three. It pays from $100 to $120 per month.

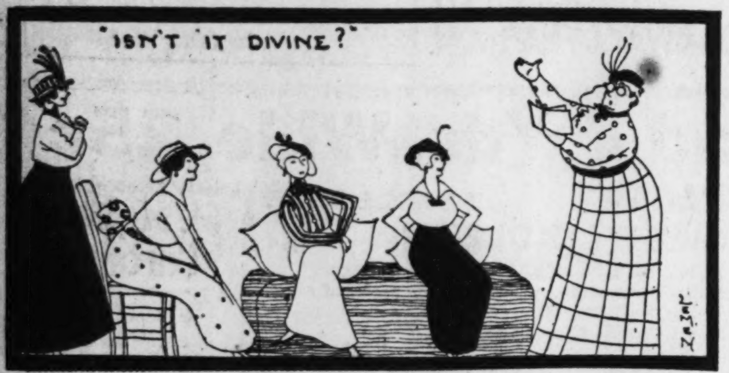
ARABELLA AS A HIGH-BROW.



"ISN'T IT DIVINE?"
ZASAR

MISS ARABELLA SIMPKINS BROWN has joined a "literary,"
Where all the high-brows in the town exhaust the dictionary
In telling what they know of books and spreading erudition
While common folks with lines and hooks engage in vulgar fishin'.
One really must improve one's mind, and so each Tuesday morning
She leaves all petty things behind, and all distraction scorning,
She's at the meeting place at nine, and waiting all excited,
Exclaiming: "Isn't it divine?" when Browning is recited.
They had a "Thackeray" last week and read his choicest pickin's;
Next week, she says with mantling cheek, she's going to the "Dickens."
A lady in an old rose gown is fond of reading sonnets,
Which keeps Miss Arabella Brown from trivial thoughts of bonnets.
And when the readings all are done they have a little luncheon,
And vote a "literary" fun, while buttered toast they're munchin'.
We asked Miss Brown the other day if she would be a high-brow;
You really should have seen the way she lifted up her eyebrow.
"Why, mercy no," she archly said, "I've tried it and its horrid.
It doesn't suit my style of head to show quite all my forehead."
And so we fear she'll never be an "intellectual" truly;
But, never mind, we'd rather see those vagrant curls unruly.
We asked her which she liked the most, a novel, ode or ballad.
She said: "The nicest thing's the toast and lovely chicken salad."

MONUMENTAL INTERVIEWS

"Ah, Gen. Sigel, how do you feel this morning and how is everything in Forest Park?"

"I am feeling quite well, except that I'm somewhat cramped from sitting on this bronze horse. As you may observe my present occupation is rather sedentary. I wonder why no one ever thought of providing a monument with a leather saddle. As for your question about Forest Park, I heard passersby say the roads are full of bumps and bad for motoring though I suppose they would be all right for horseback riding if I could ever get this cast-iron nag of mine out of a stand."

"I understand that in the Civil War there were thousands of your fellow countrymen who were proud to say that they 'fought mit Sigel.'"

"That's right, my boy. I'm strictly neutral, but I don't mind telling you that if it came to a pinch I'd come down off my high horse and get a real flesh and blood charger and go to the front again for the stars and stripes."

"Glad to hear you say that, Gen. Sigel. And do you think you'd have any trouble finding recruits to follow you into battle?"

"Not a bit. The boys who 'fought mit Sigel' would all be there if they could come back. If they could not they would send sons and grandsons."

"Hurrah for you, Gen. Sigel."

"Thanks. The next time you come back this way would you mind bringing me about a peck of copper rivets to feed this foundry horse?"

BATTLE OF THE DES PERES

UNDER cover of the darkness
On the morn of Thursday last,
Eluding all the lookouts,
As it silently went past,
The gallant little submarine,
K9, of Maplewood,
Six fathoms deep in the Des Peres,
With valiant hardihood,
And every Jackie at his post
Prepared to do or die,
Steamed right into the harbor,
All bent on emprise high,
While the enemy, unmindful
Of the danger that was near,
In care-free self-indulgence
Was consuming ginger beer.
And then and there the submarine
K9 of Maplewood,
Upheld its best traditions
Of always making good;
And they'll tell of it next winter,
When they gather round the stoves,
How a Maplewood torpedo
Sank the fleet of Webster Groves.

The Lesson of the Indian

BY CLARK M'ADAMS.

IN the discussion of war and its probable effect upon civilization, it may do us good to recall what it did to the American Indian. We are accustomed to thinking of the Indian as having always been about what he is, which is very far from the truth and does us no credit as students of humankind. It is possible to look at an Indian with some information as to his status and how he arrived at it much as one looks at a Greek bootblack in the light of what one knows of Greece in palmier days. The howling red man of the Wild West show is not so typical of primitive America as he is of a condition which war can produce anywhere on earth. It sounds ridiculous to say that wild men from Europe may be similarly attractive in such shows over here in the course of time, but there is nothing ridiculous about it. War is a great reducer, and if one keeps at it long enough the time comes when it is worth 50 cents to see one perform and hear one yell. Savagery is no more physiological in an Indian than it is in a Briton or a German. War delights in nothing more than to remove a man from a high level of life to a low one, to exchange a feather for his silk hat, and call him no less than macaroni. It has done it many a time.

It is fair to assume that society was once very much the same on both sides of the sea. There were a great many people on both hemispheres, they were all using the bow and arrow, and they were all looking up. Just how it happened that people on the other side progressed faster and climbed out of barbarism quicker is not apparent. However, they did, and at the time this hemisphere was discovered they had gone so far beyond similar achievements over here that we never think of the Indian as having been anything else. Yet he was something else, and had he been left to his own devices he would probably have worked out a scheme of existence comparing favorably with anything they had done abroad. To employ a nicety of our language, he was beaten to it.

AND why? Not that men abroad had better heads, goodness knows, for one can look over the heads of the cliffdwellers in the Colorado state house and find Shakspeare, Socrates, Caesar, Omar, Homer, Moses, Pericles, Gallileo Beethoven, Daniel Webster, Spinoza, Jefferson, Leonardo, Aristotle, Herbert Spencer, Confucius, Augustus, Joan of Arc, Sappho, Ibsen, Washington, Tolstoy, Lincoln, Disraeli, Napoleon, Attilla, Paul, Jane Addams, Shaw, Nietsche, Plutarch, Roosevelt, Edison, Marconi, Carl Marx, Chesterton, Phidias, Rameses or Rabindranath Tagore. We had nothing on the Indian. Men indeed, were created equal.

Somehow the Indian got a late start. Either he liked to camp out too well, or the climate induced an idleness that was not good for him. Still, he had started up the long stair of civilization, when what should confront him but War! How war did for the Indian is not a matter of speculation, but knowledge. At about the time Columbus discovered America the Indians were living in villages and engaged in farming. They had domesticated the wild corn of the Mexican highlands and the wild tobacco of the Southwest, and had made these the two great common staples of agriculture wherever they could be raised. Their advance out of the lower stages of barbarism under these conditions was inevitable. It was in this period of their national life that they built the great Cahokia mound group, made an excellent start in architecture in the southern temples and the southwestern cliff dwellings, and evolved their religion. Had they continued uninterrupted upon that plane they would have risen as surely as the morning sun, and instead of mere warhoops and wood nymphs we should have found the Indians lined up behind Plymouth Rock in about as good military array as the times afforded. What happened was that the Great Spirit, trying to be good to the Indians, overdid it in most singular fashion, delivering them bodily to the mercy of war.

THE Indian was undone by the buffalo. Coming like an irruption out of the Northwest, this animal multiplied with such rapidity and ranged with such persistence that within a comparatively short while it was found from the Canadian plains to the Gulf, and as far east as the Alleghenies. Like trade with the Europeans, the buffalo became something for the Indians to fight over. One tribe after another gave up its village life and its planting, and followed the buffalo in its recession into the West. The Sioux started on the Southeast seaboard and went to the Dakotas. Other tribes came out of the Rockies, and still others from regions lying along and east of the Mississippi. Cahokia was abandoned to the Appropriations Committees of the Illinois Legislature. When De Soto marched from Florida to Arkansas he saw no buffalo before he crossed the Mississippi. Two hundred years later they were common as far southeast as Florida, and the French in Louisiana were hunting them, too. The Great Plains, to which the buffalo had receded, were rimmed around by the hunting tribes, each one regarding the buffalo as its own. Even the Iroquois, we are told in Harmon's journal, partially left New York and settled in what is now Manitoba.

That was an America war much like the war in Europe now. When the Sioux found the Crows buffalo hunting, they fought. So did everybody else. War kicked them all down the stair of civilization from a fair order of barbarism into the low order in which they were found by the whites. Castenada, who was the chronicler with Coronado, says the Commanches were no better than the wolves hanging on the flanks of the buffalo herds. They followed the herds to and fro, and ate the flesh raw. Wherever the buffalo did not penetrate, the Indians remained as they had been, and so some of them remain today. In Mexico and Peru, where they escaped the kindly intentions of the Great Spirit, we found them in a higher state of barbarism and one which, undisturbed, was capable of civilization. They had about reached Salem.

Look out for the warring tribes of Europe!

New Thought League Meetings.

The New Thought League, 509 North Newstead avenue, will hear the Rev. Columbus Bradford of Kinderpost, Mo., discuss "The Life-Giving Spirit" at 11 a. m., today. "The Money Problem" will be discussed by Charles A. Green at 3 p. m.

What Leads to Tuberculosis?

In the opinion of many medical authorities, the development of pulmonary tuberculosis (consumption) is hastened, if not actually precipitated, by a loss of lime from the system: "Where there is a decalcification, the lime salts must be supplied medicinally," says Dr. J. W. Carhart of San Antonio, Texas, in the May, 1913, issue of "Medical Progress."

To supply these necessary salts has, in many instances, proved a difficult matter, since in some forms they are not easily assimilable.

In Eckman's Alterative, however, calcium (lime) is so combined with other remedial agents as to be assimilated by the average person without digestive disturbance, and to this, in part, is due the success of this remedy in the treatment of tuberculosis and chronic throat and bronchial affections.

We make no boastful claims for Eckman's Alterative, but a careful record of results obtained during years of widespread use warrants the assertion that many such cases apparently have yielded to it.

It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, hence its use is not attended with danger. Your druggist has it or will order it, or you can send direct.

LITTLE GIRL WHO WILL BE PICNIC ATTRACTION

PHILO GILL...

GIRL, 3 YEARS OLD, TO ACT AS A "BARKER" AT PICNIC

Child Will Solicit Custom for Visitation Parish Restaurant at Normandy Grove, Saturday.

One of the most charming "barkers" ever heard at an outdoor entertainment will be little Philo Gill, 3 years old, who is to be an attraction at the Visitation parish picnic, at Normandy Grove, Saturday, June 5. She is a niece of the ex-Congressman, Patrick Gill. Her mother, Mrs. Henry Gill, expects added patronage at the picnic restaurant, of which she will be in charge, on account of Philo's "barking."

Frank C. O'Malley, general chairman of the picnic, will address a final meeting of the committees, Wednesday evening. Associated with him on the general committee are Florence McAuliffe, vice chairman; John Concannon, secretary; Rev. R. F. Gavin, treasurer; Rev. J. A. Dockery and Ambrose McHenry.

The Visitation Young Ladies' Sodality is one of the strongest in the city. A battalion of girls will work under Miss Mae Fahey, in the ice cream booth adjoining the refreshment concession conducted by Mrs. Peter Fahey. Mrs. C. L. Geraghty will superintend the dinner table. Athletic sports of various sorts will be in charge of John Fox and Anthony Huer.

Help the Stomach in Digesting Your Food

When the stomach fails to digest and distribute that which is eaten, the bowels become clogged with a mass of waste and refuse that ferments and generates poisons that are gradually forced into the blood, causing distress and often serious illness.

Most people naturally object to the drastic cathartic and purgative agents that shock the system. A mild, gentle laxative, positive in its effect and that will quickly relieve constipation, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, sold by druggists at 50 cents and one dollar a bottle. It does not gripe or cramp, but acts easily and pleasantly and is therefore the most satisfactory remedy for children, women and elderly persons. For a free trial bottle write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 452 Washington street, Monticello, Ills.

LIBERTY BELL TO COME IF CHILDREN WISH TO SEE IT

"I Shall Be Glad to Do Everything I Can," Wires the Mayor of Philadelphia.

The Liberty Bell will come to St. Louis next fall if the school children of St. Louis wish to see it.

This was indicated by a telegram received by the Post-Dispatch yesterday from Mayor Blankenburg of Philadelphia, who is in charge of arrangements for the bell's journey to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, and return.

The telegram was sent in response to one from the Post-Dispatch, which told of Mayor Kiel's proclamation, asking that school children sign petitions to bring the bell here. The message sent by the Post-Dispatch also stated that the petition blanks were being distributed in the schools, and that 75,000 children were expected to sign them. This was a conservative statement, for Supt. Blewett estimates the number at 80,000 to 90,000.

Mayor Blankenburg's Message.

Mayor Blankenburg replied:

> PHILADELPHIA, May 28, 1915.
> Editor the Post-Dispatch, St. Louis, Mo.
> Your telegram received. I shall be glad to do everything I can to have the Liberty Bell stop on its return journey from San Francisco to St. Louis.
> I fully appreciate the desire of the 75,000 children to get a view of our precious relic.
> There is nothing that will be a greater incentive to patriotism and love of country than a view of the Liberty Bell, which I think belongs to the whole country.
> RUDOLPH BLANKENBURG,
> Mayor.

Ben Altheimer to Help.

Ben Altheimer, who is credited with originating the St. Louis observance of Flag Day, yesterday announced that he would be in Philadelphia tomorow, and that he would call on Mayor Blankenburg. He said he would give the Mayor personal assurance of the desire of St. Louisans to have the bell stop here, and that he would assure him, by authority of President Hidden of the Business Men's League, that any expense attaching to the visit would be met.

Altheimer said he expected Hudson E. Bridge, who is going East on the same train with him today, would accompany him on his call at Mayor Blankenburg's office.

The petitions probably will be sent to Philadelphia the last of this week. Blanks, furnished by the Post-Dispatch, are being distributed through the schools by Supt. Blewett's office. The Post-Dispatch, one week ago yesterday, began the movement to bring the bell here, and Mayor Kiel's proclamation followed on Monday.

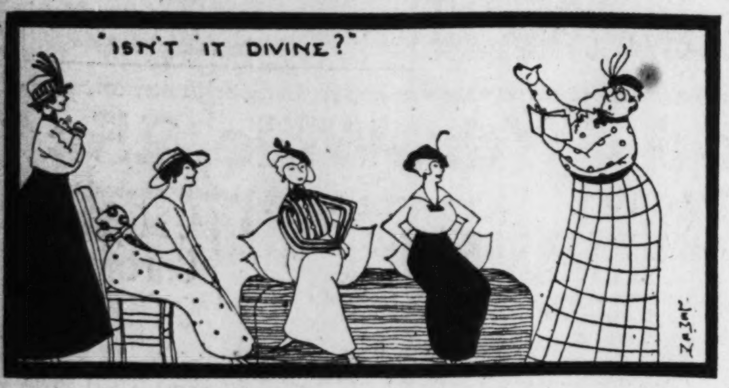
ARABELLA AS A HIGH-BROW.



"ISN'T IT DIVINE?"

MISS ARABELLA SIMPKINS BROWN has joined a "literary,"
Where all the high-brows in the town exhaust the dictionary
In telling what they know of books and spreading erudition
While common folks with lines and hooks engage in vulgar fishin'.
One really must improve one's mind, and so each Tuesday morning
She leaves all petty things behind, and all distraction scorning,
She's at the meeting place at nine, and waiting all excited,
Exclaiming: "Isn't it divine?" when Browning is recited.
They had a "Thackeray" last week and read his choicest pickin's;
Next week, she says with mantling cheek, she's going to the "Dickens."
A lady in an old rose gown is fond of reading sonnets,
Which keeps Miss Arabella Brown from trivial thoughts of bonnets.
And when the readings all are done they have a little luncheon,
And vote a "literary" fun, while buttered toast they're munchin'.
We asked Miss Brown the other day if she would be a high-brow;
You really should have seen the way she lifted up her eyebrow.
"Why, mercy no," she archly said, "I've tried it and its horrid.
It doesn't suit my style of head to show quite all my forehead."
And so we fear she'll never be an "intellectual" truly;
But, never mind, we'd rather see those vagrant curls unruly.
We asked her which she liked the most, a novel, ode or ballad.
She said: "The nicest thing's the toast and lovely chicken salad."

MONUMENTAL INTERVIEWS

"Ah, Gen. Sigel, how do you feel this morning and how is everything in Forest Park?"

"I am feeling quite well, except that I'm somewhat cramped from sitting on this bronze horse. As you may observe my present occupation is rather sedentary. I wonder why no one ever thought of providing a monument with a leather saddle. As for your question about Forest Park, I heard passersby say the roads are full of bumps and bad for motoring though I suppose they would be all right for horseback riding if I could ever get this cast-iron nag of mine out of a stand."

"I understand that in the Civil War there were thousands of your fellow countrymen who were proud to say that they 'fought mit Sigel.'"

"That's right, my boy. I'm strictly neutral, but I don't mind telling you that if it came to a pinch I'd come down off my high horse and get a real flesh and blood charger and go to the front again for the stars and stripes."

"Glad to hear you say that, Gen. Sigel. And do you think you'd have any trouble finding recruits to follow you into battle?"

"Not a bit. The boys who 'fought mit Sigel' would all be there if they could come back. If they could not they would send sons and grandsons."

"Hurrah for you, Gen. Sigel."

"Thanks. The next time you come back this way would you mind bringing me about a peck of copper rivets to feed this foundry horse?"

BATTLE OF THE DES PERES

UNDER cover of the darkness
On the morn of Thursday last,
Eluding all the lookouts,
As it silently went past,
The gallant little submarine,
K9, of Maplewood,
Six fathoms deep in the Des Peres,
With valiant hardihood,
And every Jackie at his post
Prepared to do or die,
Steamed right into the harbor,
All bent on emprise high,
While the enemy, unmindful
Of the danger that was near,
In care-free self-indulgence
Was consuming ginger beer.
And then and there the submarine
K9 of Maplewood,
Upheld its best traditions
Of always making good;
And they'll tell of it next winter,
When they gather round the stoves,
How a Maplewood torpedo
Sank the fleet of Webster Groves.

The Lesson of the Indian

BY CLARK M'ADAMS.

IN the discussion of war and its probable effect upon civilization, it may do us good to recall what it did to the American Indian. We are accustomed to thinking of the Indian as having always been about what he is, which is very far from the truth and does us no credit as students of humankind. It is possible to look at an Indian with some information as to his status and how he arrived at it much as one looks at a Greek bootblack in the light of what one knows of Greece in palmier days. The howling red man of the Wild West show is not so typical of primitive America as he is of a condition which war can produce anywhere on earth. It sounds ridiculous to say that wild men from Europe may be similarly attractive in such shows over here in the course of time, but there is nothing ridiculous about it. War is a great reducer, and if one keeps at it long enough the time comes when it is worth 50 cents to see one perform and hear one yell. Savagery is no more physiological in an Indian than it is in a Briton or a German. War delights in nothing more than to remove a man from a high level of life to a low one, to exchange a feather for his silk hat, and call him no less than macaroni. It has done it many a time.

It is fair to assume that society was once very much the same on both sides of the sea. There were a great many people on both hemispheres, they were all using the bow and arrow, and they were all looking up. Just how it happened that people on the other side progressed faster and climbed out of barbarism quicker is not apparent. However, they did, and at the time this hemisphere was discovered they had gone so far beyond similar achievements over here that we never think of the Indian as having been anything else. Yet he was something else, and had he been left to his own devices he would probably have worked out a scheme of existence comparing favorably with anything they had done abroad. To employ a nicety of our language, he was beaten to it.

AND why? Not that men abroad had better heads, goodness knows, for one can look over the heads of the cliffdwellers in the Colorado state house and find Shakspeare, Socrates, Caesar, Omar, Homer, Moses, Pericles, Gallileo, Beethoven, Daniel Webster, Spinoza, Jefferson, Leonardo, Aristotle, Herbert Spencer, Confucius, Augustus, Joan of Arc, Sappho, Ibsen, Washington, Tolstoy, Lincoln, Disraeli, Napoleon, Attilla, Paul, Jane Addams, Shaw, Nietsche, Plutarch, Roosevelt, Edison, Marconi, Carl Marx, Chesterton, Phidias, Rameses or Rabindranath Tagore. We had nothing on the Indian. Men indeed, were created equal.

Somehow the Indian got a late start. Either he liked to camp out too well, or the climate induced an idleness that was not good for him. Still, he had started up the long stair of civilization, when what should confront him but War! How war did for the Indian is not a matter of speculation, but knowledge. At about the time Columbus discovered America the Indians were living in villages and engaged in farming. They had domesticated the wild corn of the Mexican highlands and the wild tobacco of the Southwest, and had made these the two great common staples of agriculture wherever they could be raised. Their advance out of the lower stages of barbarism under these conditions was inevitable. It was in this period of their national life that they built the great Cahokia mound group, made an excellent start in architecture in the southern temples and the southwestern cliff dwellings, and evolved their religion. Had they continued uninterrupted upon that plane they would have risen as surely as the morning sun, and instead of mere warhoops and wood nymphs we should have found the Indians lined up behind Plymouth Rock in about as good military array as the times afforded. What happened was that the Great Spirit, trying to be good to the Indians, overdid it in most singular fashion, delivering them bodily to the mercy of war.

THE Indian was undone by the buffalo. Coming like an irruption out of the Northwest, this animal multiplied with such rapidity and ranged with such persistence that within a comparatively short while it was found from the Canadian plains to the Gulf, and as far east as the Alleghenies. Like trade with the Europeans, the buffalo became something for the Indians to fight over. One tribe after another gave up its village life and its planting, and followed the buffalo in its recession into the West. The Sioux started on the Southeast seaboard and went to the Dakotas. Other tribes came out of the Rockies, and still others from regions lying along and east of the Mississippi. Cahokia was abandoned to the Appropriations Committees of the Illinois Legislature. When De Soto marched from Florida to Arkansas he saw no buffalo before he crossed the Mississippi. Two hundred years later they were common as far southeast as Florida, and the French in Louisiana were hunting them, too. The Great Plains, to which the buffalo had receded, were rimmed around by the hunting tribes, each one regarding the buffalo as its own. Even the Iroquois, we are told in Harmon's journal, partially left New York and settled in what is now Manitoba.

That was an America war much like the war in Europe now. When the Sioux found the Crows buffalo hunting, they fought. So did everybody else. War kicked them all down the stair of civilization from a fair order of barbarism into the low order in which they were found by the whites. Castenada, who was the chronicler with Coronado, says the Commanches were no better than the wolves hanging on the flanks of the buffalo herds. They followed the herds to and fro, and ate the flesh raw. Wherever the buffalo did not penetrate, the Indians remained as they had been, and so some of them remain today. In Mexico and Peru, where they escaped the kindly intentions of the Great Spirit, we found them in a higher state of barbarism and one which, undisturbed, was capable of civilization. They had about reached Salem.

Look out for the warring tribes of Europe!

FLOWERS IN BLOSSOM IN "GRANDMOTHER'S GARDEN"

Section of Shaw's Garden Is Now at Its Best—Farm Crops Are Planted.

The "Grandmother's Garden" of the Missouri Botanical Gardens, which is just west of the main garden, is now at its best. Here one finds the showy peony, the graceful swinging columbine, the ribbon grass, sweet williams, bleeding hearts, and sweet brier.

Besides these are the herbs which were used as a panacea for the ills of mankind as well as seasoning for his foods. Among these are sweet marjoriam, thyme, angelica, rue rosemary, licorice, hoarhound, sage, balm and lavender. South of the "Grandmother's Garden" is the farm crop section, which is especially attractive and instructive to school children. Here the student has an opportunity of studying the growth of the farm crops—wheat, oats, rye, timothy, bluegrass, corn, broom corn, sugar cane, sorghum, peanuts, potatoes, sweet potatoes, beans, Canadian peas, clover, alfalfa, hemp and flax. The plants in these two sections are plainly labeled.

The garden is open free to the public every Sunday from 2 p. m. until sunset and every week day from 8 a. m. until a half hour after sunset.

Lutheran Picnic Next Thursday.

The picnic of St. Luke's Evangelical Lutheran School and Sunday school will be held Thursday at Riverside Park, South Broadway and Gasconade. The parade will leave the school, Neosho street and Alaska avenue, at 9 a. m.

OPERATIVE MILLERS TO HOLD CONVENTION HERE NEXT YEAR

Manufacturers of Mill Machinery Will Have Exhibition—Switchmen Coming in 1917.

Secretary Runyan of the Convention Bureau returned yesterday from Cincinnati, where he had been attending the convention of the Fraternity of Operative Millers of America, and the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

The millers meet annually and the F. O. M. A. Manufacturers' Auxiliary meets biennially. Both of these organizations unanimously voted to meet in St. Louis the first Monday in June, 1916. There are 870 members in the Operative Millers' Association and the Manufacturers' Auxiliary has a membership of 350. They are manufacturers of machinery used in the milling industry. This latter organization will give a five-day exhibit of machinery, etc., in the Coliseum.

The Switchmen's Union of North America opened its biennial session in Buffalo May 17 and adjourned May 28. This is an organization which has a membership of 20,000 switchmen, with a women's auxiliary. The Convention Bureau early in this year inaugurated a campaign for the 1917 session for St. Louis. Their efforts have been successful and the Switchmen's Union will hold their biennial session in St. Louis in 1917.

TRAFFIC PROBLEM DEMANDS PARKWAY TALBERT DECLARES

Director of Streets and Sewers, Says Outlet Would Be Adequate for Several Years.

GIVES COUNT OF VEHICLES

Only Other Solution Would Prove Almost as Expensive, and Temporary.

Charles M. Talbert, Director of Streets and Sewers, in a formal statement, points out in a striking way that some new east and west highway is absolutely necessary to relieve the present serious traffic conditions.

He corroborates the recent statement of President McPheeters of the Police Board, that the traffic question is now the most serious problem the police and street officials have yet been called upon to handle. His statement follows:

By C. M. TALBERT.
Director of Streets and Sewers.

Immediate steps must be taken by the people of St. Louis to provide an additional thoroughfare to handle the east and west traffic from the downtown district, which is increasing at an alarming rate.

The Central Parkway will, in my opinion, solve the traffic problem, and would serve as an adequate outlet for many years.

If the parkway is defeated at the polls June 8, it will be necessary for the public to immediately authorize in some manner the creation of a new street, or widening of present streets, to meet the urgent needs.

Actual count of vehicles, made under my supervision, has proven that one vehicle passes the corner of Twelfth and Locust streets every three and one-half seconds, on an average, throughout the day from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. During the hours of maximum traffic the traffic is virtually a continuous line of vehicles, choking the thoroughfare.

This shows the narrow margin of safety and illustrates the constant danger from accidents, both to pedestrians and to drivers of vehicles. It vividly brings to mind that we are close to the limit of congestion.

Unless the Central Parkway is built for the relief of this east and west traffic, some other expedient must be undertaken to solve the difficulties. It is only a matter of a short time, under present conditions, when the traffic will outgrow the bounds of the streets we now have, and the municipal authorities will be unable to handle it with any degree of safety to the public.

Plans now are being considered to make Locust street a one-way traffic highway. This would afford relief only. It would shift a part of the traffic to Pine and Chestnut streets by arbitrary rules. This would soon choke these streets and renew the necessity for drastic relief action.

Our actual count shows that an average of 2595 vehicles per hour use Twelfth street throughout the day, an increase from 1509 per hour the previous year. Twelfth street really is a wide classification yard, from which vehicles turn in all directions, going to the east, west, north, south and southwest.

Surprising Increase in Traffic.

The figures show a surprising increase in the east and westbound traffic on Locust, Pine and Chestnut streets. An average of 610 vehicles per hour pass a given point on Locust, an increase of 45 per cent over the previous year. The traffic on Pine street has increased 300 per cent over last year. This immense increase is probably due to the paving of Pine street with wood blocks, diverting a part of the fast traffic to that street.

If the parkway is abandoned it will be necessary to consider other means of handling the traffic. This might take the form of widening present streets, or opening a new street, both of which would be very costly.

Additional facilities might be gained by condemning half a block north or south of either Chestnut street or Pine street, and converting it into a wide highway, where slow moving vehicles can be kept near the curbs and the faster vehicles in the middle of the street.

Locust street has reached the limit of congestion. The only possible relief on that street is a slight widening of the traffic way by narrowing the sidewalks. This could not exceed three feet on each side, making it a total of six feet wider.

The carrying out of the proposed widening of Washington avenue would make the street 80 feet wide, with a double-track street car line in the center. This would undoubtedly help Washington avenue as a street, but will never provide a great trafficway because of the car tracks.

My study of the traffic congestion has been under way a little more than two years, and the facts have been clearly proven from every angle by actual count by inspectors working under my direction.

I am convinced that the proposed Central Parkway will admirably meet present needs and provide adequate facilities for many years. If the parkway is abandoned, in my opinion the widening or reconstruction of streets such as I have outlined, or others which may be suggested, will be almost as expensive in the aggregate as the parkway, and will afford only partial temporary relief at great expense. This needless expense and attending continuous traffic problems in future years convinces me that the Central Parkway should be adopted as the permanent solution of the big problem.

Goodyear Passes Goodyear

$500,000 Better

Yet Users Pay $5,000,000 Less

Note these amazing facts:

Goodyear tires, as built this year, will cost us $500,000 more than if built like 1914 Goodyears.

That's because of improvements.

Yet this year's output will cost our users some five million dollars less than if sold at 1914 prices.

That's because of a big price reduction, made February 1st. It was our third in two years, totaling 45 per cent.

Why Better Tires?

You ask why we add that half-million dollars in face of such reductions.

We have always added every betterment our experts could discover. And we spend on research $100,000 yearly just to seek improvements out.

Goodyears may pass Goodyears, but we make sure that no rival ever can.

What Extras Cost

Goodyear Fortified Tires embody many extras. Five of them are features found in no other tire that's built. Others are found in but few.

Based on current output, those extras this year will cost us $1,635,000.

That is, if we omitted our exclusive features, which all others do omit—

And other protections which most makers omit—

We could probably add to our profits this year more than 1½ million dollars.

But What of You?

But Goodyear users would pay. Those extras save our users many times the cost to us.

In those extras lies the reason why Goodyear outsells any other tire. And in that mammoth output lies the reason for the value that we give.

Think of these things when other tires are offered.

Each Goodyear extra means a saving to you.

Any dealer, if you ask him, can supply you Goodyear tires. (2411)

ARCHITECTS TELL WHY THEY OPPOSE CENTRAL PARKWAY

Lacks Merit in Design and Would Fulfill None of Functions Claimed, They Say.

A statement explaining the opposition of the St. Louis Chapter, American Institute of Architects, to the Central Parkway, has been issued for publication. It is signed by T. C. Young and 21 other members.

The architects' statement is as follows:

"The parkway project having been disapproved by resolution of the St. Louis Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, it seems desirable to make known the basis for this action.

"Having been requested to assist in the preparation of the Future St. Louis exhibit, a number of St. Louis architects spent several weeks in an effort to adjust the parkway design to a general street plan, as this necessary relation had received no previous consideration by the city. The decision was unanimous that the parkway was useless and unnecessary to the logical development of the central business district and that a much more effective and practical method of obtaining the desired result could certainly be devised. This would require, however, a more extended study, based on accurate data not now available, and to be obtained only after thorough investigation of existing conditions and records.

"Surveys Not Made."

"It is certain that the city has not made proper investigations, prepared the physical and social 'surveys' or acquired information necesary before even the consideration of structural improvements should be attempted. It is manifestly certain that no qualified expert advice has been followed in the preparation of the parkway design. The process and methods of city planning are as well established as the methods of planning individual buildings or works of engineering. Therefore, when the city proceeds to the execution of important improvements without investigating existing conditions and providing for future needs, it is taking a risk which no person would think of doing in a private enterprise.

"The present unsatisfactory physical condition of St. Louis is the result of building without a plan and without system or forethought as to future developments. The present proceeding in regard to the parkway is merely continuing the old way, which has elsewhere been discarded as inefficient and wasteful.

"It is now known that the 'arbitrary' could be abolished only by action of the Interstate Commerce Commission. A proper preliminary investigation revealing this fact would have made unnecessary the expenditure of $7,000,000 for the free bridge.

"The first necessity is, therefore, for the city to acquire a comprehensive plan. The actual preparation of a city plan is a complex and highly technical work, which can be properly performed only by a large organized corps of paid technical experts and could be obtained at an expense not exceeding the cost of the coming election.

"Cost of Land Only."

"The success of the St. Louis Pageant was due to well-directed public opinion and co-operation in carrying out a plan devised and directed by recognized experts.

"The cost to be determined by the commission, which may be authorized by the election of June 8, must necessarily be the cost of the land only. The further cost of actual construction of the Parkway can be ascertained with accuracy only from plans and specifications, which at present do not exist, nor are they in the course of preparation.

"The success of the election will in effect carry with it the approval of the location and entire design, as this cannot be extended or materially altered within the limits of the territory covered by the ordinance.

"Legitimate criticism should be invited rather than discouraged or suppressed, and in the case of the parkway must be based on the scheme as presented for approval in the form of the published plan. It may not be avoided on the promise of intangible improvements to be added in the future.

"The parkway scheme bears no studied relation to any other possible improvement, and in its proposed location becomes a means of further separation between two important sections of the city, while the great need is for unification.

"No Relief for Traffic."

"It would not serve for the relief of traffic congestion if the present main course of traffic could be deflected to the parkway. The congestion would merely be transferred to Grand avenue, which must be traversed for many blocks before traffic could be delivered into the six or seven important western arteries between Forest Park boulevard and Easton avenue.

"Playgrounds, wading pools and bathhouses are not consistent features of a monumental highway. They are public utilities and should be located with reference to greater safety, convenience and neighborhood necessities as determined by social 'surveys,' which have not yet been formulated.

"The triple roadway merely passing Union Station does not form an adequate setting for a main city gateway.

"No consideration has been given to proper architectural setting for future public buildings nor to improve surroundings for the Public Library.

"It is, therefore, our conclusion that the Parkway should be disapproved because it lacks merit in design and would fulfill none of the functions claimed for it either from the standpoint of utility or beauty.

"It is our recommendation that steps be taken toward the preparation of a comprehensive city plan under the advice of recognized experts, and that no important civic improvement be constructed previous to the adoption of such a plan.

Other Cities Get Plans First.

"The course we recommend is that adopted by 15 or 20 important American cities, which have in the past few years taken up the problem of city reconstruction or already provided themselves with a fully developed plan.

"If the course recommended by the parkway advocates prevails St. Louis will be unique in deciding to reverse the usual operation and begin its construction previous to the most elemental preliminary study and preparation.

"T. C. Young, Henry Wright, Louis La Beaume, Eugene S. Klein, E. C. Klipstein, Wm. W. Wedemeyer, John Lawrence Maurin, E. J. Russell, Theo. C. Link, Wm. B. Ittner, I. R. Timlin, L. Baylor Pendleton, Lawrence Hill, Wm. A. Hirsch, W. H. Gruen, John J. Roth, Guy Study, John C. Stephen, W. P. McArdle, J. N. Watson, I. S. Taylor, Walter S. Rathmann.

"The above statement is a correct copy of the signed original, which was subsequently formally approved by vote of St. Louis Chapter A. I. A., with request for publication.

"T. C. YOUNG."

PREDICTS CITY OF DIAGONAL STREETS

Harry G. Clymer, architect, of the firm of Clymer & Drischler, yesterday issued a statement of his views on the parkway question, differing radically from the expression of the St. Louis Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

Clymer is for the parkway, which he terms the most comprehensive and important improvement scheme ever projected here. He disputes the statement of other architects, that the parkway would not fit into a general scheme of street widening and beautification, and that it had been undertaken without sufficient study. He said:

"The building up of a complete parkway boulevard system, with civic centers and all that these things mean, involves a world of work, and while we would like to see them executed all at once, the undertaking is too great to be accomplished in any other way than piece by piece, step by step, and in such a manner as not too heavily tax the community on the financial side. However, a start should be made, and no better initial move could be suggested than the central parkway.

"It may be agreed, perhaps, that Market and Chestnut streets are not just the best streets to include, but it is certain that they are as good as Pine and Olive, and equally well adapted to the successful carrying out of the project. The professional skill of the city will not deny that the parkway scheme, as mapped out, is possible of development into a more comprehensive scheme, so as to include the creation of an extensive park in front of Union Station and the extension of same as far north as the Central Library.

"I venture to say that if the parkway is adopted it will be only a short time until the necessary funds will be found for a board of experts to work up a scheme which shall involve the city as a whole, with its civic centers in extreme ends and in the heart of the city, with its boulevards crosswise and diagonal through the city, making it a city which can be traversed from one extreme to the other in the shortest possible time, while passing many points of interest."

Marshall School Pupils Send in 35 Essays on the Parkway.

Thirty-five pupils of the Marshall School yesterday submitted essays on "Why St. Louis Needs a Parkway" to the Citizens' Parkway Committee, 521 Olive street. The essays were neatly wrapped and mailed in one package. This is the largest consignment yet received at one time from any school.

Theodore Wilmerding, 12 years old, of the St. Laborius parochial school gives seven reason why a parkway would be useful to the city, each reason expressing some new idea or an old idea stated in a new way. His reasons are:

1. It would eliminate the backdoor entrance to the city.
2. It would put St. Louis in the front rank of American cities.
3. It would add the last "0" to the million population.
4. It would put the goods in the slogan, "St. Louis Has the Goods."
5. "St. Louis to Front" will no longer be a joke if the parkway is built.
6. It would put a smile on St. Louis that won't come off.
7. "Build the Parkway or Bust" should be our motto, and future St. Louisans will say "Father was right."

Parkway Plan Had Its Inception 8 Years Ago

Architects Late With Objections

The St. Louis Chapter of American Institute of Architects is telling the public 10 days before the parkway election that its members are opposed to the parkway. They have waited since 1911 to make this public. In 1911 the City Plan Association's report was published and showed a detail map of the Central Parkway, providing for a parkway between Market and Chestnut streets from Twelfth street to Twentieth street, and from there taking half a city block directly west of Theresa, branching out at that point into a large park.

The public is entitled to know why these objections, if there is anything to them, were not made in November and December, 1914, and the early months of this year. In October this ordinance was introduced in the Municipal Assembly and received many public hearings before the House of Delegates and also received a public hearing in the Council. Since that time it has constantly been before the people because of the publicity given the referendum petition. Again it was given wide publicity in the question of calling a special election, when it came before the last Municipal Assembly for action.

Walter B. Stevens, present secretary of the City Plan Commission, who is familiar with the reports and the plans from their inception, has made the following statement:

The evolution of the Central Parkway propositon is interesting. In 1907, eight years ago, the Civic League, of which the late Henry T. Kent was at that time president, put forth a "City Plan for St. Louis." The plan was presented in a book of 107 pages and included maps and pictures. The general city plan committee included William Trelease, chairman; J. Charles Cabanne, Dwight F. Davis, John D. Davis, J. Lawrence Mauran and John F. Lee.

Street Committee Named.

The defects in city planning from which St. Louis was suffering were pointed out. The work of preparing this plan was divided among committees, one of which dealt with thoroughfares. This committee on street improvements was composed of J. Charles Cabanne, Herman C. von Schrenk, Theodore C. Link, Edward Flad, James C. Travilla, Wilbur T. Trueblood and W. P. H. Turner.

One of the principal recommendations dwelt on what the committee called "a boulevard to Union Station." Referring to the deplorable conditions about Union Station, the committee said:

"No form of improvement counts more than a pleasing approach to the city. The importance of the land entrance to a city can scarcely be exaggerated. If it is attractive, visitors have a pleasing impression of the city's life; if it is unattractive, travelers are most likely to hurry through without any desire to stop off. We have in the Union Station a massive and imposing structure of which the city can justly be proud, but the approach to the station is a constant rebuke to the esthetic ideals of the city. Whatever favorable impressions of the Union Station the traveller may have, they are soon dispelled when he views the architectural ugliness all about it. Furthermore, if he takes a Market street car or an automobile down Chestnut street the same dilapidated conditions greet him on every side. From the Union Station to Twelfth street, between Market and Chestnut, there is scarcely a respectable building to be found.

Committee's Recommendations.

"In order to relieve this unsightliness and leave upon the mind of the visitor—be he merchant, manufacturer, homeseeker, or transcontinental traveler—the most favorable first impressions, which are usually lasting, and to guarantee to the city for all time a spacious and splendid gateway, we recommend the purchase of the half block of ground along the south side of Chestnut street, extending from the Municipal Buildings Group to Eighteenth street, and widening of Chestnut street to 150 feet for this distance, and the improvement of this wide thoroughfare, by a treatment similar to the famous Champs Elysees of Paris—a boulevard through the center for light vehicles and a roadway on either side for service traffic, with two rows of trees separating the roadways from the boulevard.

"For the improvement of the immediate surroundings of the Union Station, we recommend the purchase by the city of the two blocks lying between Eighteenth and Twentieth streets, Market and Chestnut streets, and the transformation of this area into a park.

"These improvements would cost a considerable sum of money, but they would be of inestimable commercial value to the business interests of the city and would emphasize in the most effective manner the true importance of St. Louis as the commercial gateway to the great Southwest.

"It would be desirable if in time the proposed broad thoroughfare extending from Twelfth street to Union Station might be continued west to Grand avenue, but we would recommend only that Chestnut street to Beaumont street and Pine street from Beaumont street be established as a boulevard connecting the Union Station Park and the broad highway from the municipal group of buildings with Lindell, Pine and Forest Park boulevards."

Launched Eight Years Ago.

Thus eight years ago was launched the movement for what is now known as the proposed central parkway. Among the other members of the City Plan Committees of the Civic League who joined in the creation of this "city plan for St. Louis" eight years ago were J. A. Hooke, now Director of Public Utilities; George E. Kessler, Henry Wright, W. K. Bixby, J. Lionberger Davis, Luther Ely Smith, Charles Nagel, Maj. Julius Pitzman, Mrs. Philip N. Moore, Frederick G. Zeibig, James C. Travilla, George C. Hitchcock, Murray Carleton, John Fowler and B. Schnurmacher.

The City Plan Association was organized in 1910, five years ago. It was composed of public-spirited men who contributed to a fund to carry on this volunteer work of city planning. The members of this association were George H. Allen, Paul Bakewell Jr., Joseph R. Barroll, J. C. Barrows, James W. Black, Henry A. Boeckeler, A. A. Busch, Sam D. Capen, W. F. Carter, R. S. Colnon, Isaac T. Cook, J. Lionberger Davis, Robert C. Day, Albert N. Edwards, E. A. Faust, C. Marquard Forster, Pierre A. Garneau, W. A. Giraldin, Louis H. Haase, Harry B. Hawes, Charles Holman, Jeptha D. Howe, William B. Ittner, A. L. Johnson, James C. Jones, Morton Jourdan, Daniel N. Kirby, H. P. Knapp, Hugo A. Koehler, Frederick H. Kreismann, A. B. Lambert, William J. Lemp, J. A. Lewis, Richard McCulloch, James J. McTague, Alten S. Miller, George W. Niedringhaus, H. W. Peters, J. J. Raleigh, Maxime Reber, Edgar R. Rombauer, E. J. Russell, F. D. Seward, A. L. Shapleigh, George W. Simmons, George J. Tansey, Daniel G. Taylor, W. P. H. Turner, G. H. Walker, Walter B. Woodward, T. C. Young, L. B. Ely, M. L. Holman, W. M. Reedy, E. J. Troy and Henry Wright.

In 1911 the association submitted a report signed by the secretary, Henry Wright. The report recommended the measures which had then been introduced for the cut-off from Lindell into Locust, at Channing avenue, for the widening of Locust at Thirteenth street and for the widening of Washington avenue from Jefferson to Grand avenue.

Passage of Measures Urged.

"All of these measures," the report continued, "are in line with the urgent necessities in relieving traffic congestion and dangerous intersections and should be promptly given hearty support in their passage, but should be promptly undertaken and completed with the utmost dispatch."

"The question of a fine thoroughfare between the logical heart of the city, at Grand avenue, near Olive, and the business district is one of vital importance to the proper growth of the city. Such an improvement would not only form a much-needed traffic-way, but by giving it proper scope would form a nucleus around which a general renovation and beautifying of the city might be started. The tentative plan which has been worked out under the caption of 'The Central Parkway,' embodies some ideas which have ben advanced before, but goes farther, we believe, than any of the former plans. It would seem to include in a most fortunate manner provision for a number of much needed improvements, and by binding them into a unit, would have the added advantage of the enhancement of each by the existence of the others.

These improvements which, it is suggested, should extend at least from Twelfth street to Grand avenue, near the present position of Chestnut street, would form a wide plaza for a public group, with the present city hall and Municipal Courts as a nucleus for further city buildings; this being carried through to the Union Station includes, at once, the long-felt desire for a better gateway to the city, with proper and dignified connections to the business and hotel districts. West of the Union Station a less width is maintained to a point beyond Jefferson avenue, where it continues along the present Lawton avenue at such width as can best be secured with the least damage to existing buildings. Approaching Grand avenue, the parkway branches into Lindell and Forest Park boulevards, and the intervening spaces are occupied with open plazas around, and in which should be grouped buildings of a public and semi-public nature, which, by reason of this most central location, would be convenient to all sections of the city." (City Plan Association Report, pages 13-14, published April 1, 1911.)

The Executive Committee of the City Plan Association reviewing its work concluded: (Page 6.)

"Inasmuch as there has recently been adopted an ordinance which provides for a City Plan Commission, to be composed of six city officials and nine members appointed by the Mayor, whose duty it will be to prosecute the work for which this association was formed, we submit to that commission this report of the efforts of this association for city planning for St. Louis."

Situation Studied a Year.

When the City Plan Commission was organized in the summer of 1911 its membership included men who had been especially active in the preceding work of the city plan committees of the Civic League and of the City Plan Association. After more than a year's study of the situation the City Plan Commission, by a unanimous vote, recommended the central parkway.

The proposition which comes before the voters on the eighth of June is no new thing. It has back of it progenitors and sponsors whose good citizenship cannot be questioned and whose judgment in city planning is admitted. The central parkway movement had its formal beginning with the city plan work of the Civic League eight years ago. It was taken up, studied, and recommended by the City Plan Association four years ago as "of vital importance to the proper growth of the city."

The City Plan Commission proceeded upon the foundations laid by these studies in city planning extending over a series of years. It adopted the central parkway as named and outlined by the City Plan Association, changing that plan to the width of the whole block instead of a half block west of the Union Station.

GERMANY SUGGESTS FURTHER DISCUSSION OF LUSITANIA CASE; OFFERS REPARATION FOR ATTACKS ON GULFLIGHT AND CUSHING

VANDERBILT LEFT RICHES TO FAMILY, NONE TO CHARITY

Eldest Son Gets $5,000,000 Fund, Two Youngest $15,000,000 in Trust.

$3,000,000 TO WIDOW

She Also Receives 3 Estates—First Wife Does Not Share in Distribution.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The will of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, who perished when the Lusitania was torpedoed by a German submarine off the Irish coast May 7, was filed for probate in the Surrogate's Court today.

In contrast with the testaments of many men of wealth, the document, executed Dec. 16, 1913, is lucid. The language employed is simple and direct, and apparently not open to misinterpretation. Fifteen typewritten pages are used in disposing of $30,000,000, most of which remains in the Vanderbilt family. No gifts to charity are made.

Vanderbilt provided liberally for his second wife, Mrs. Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, whom he married in London in December, 1911, but made no provision for his first wife, Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, presumably because of a substantial settlement made in his lifetime, said by rumor to have been $5,000,000. William H. Vanderbilt, his son by his first wife, is provided for.

Widow Gets $3,000,000.

To Mrs. Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt is first bequeathed $2,000,000, as per an antenuptial agreement. To this is added $1,000,000 outright and the income from a trust fund of $5,000,000, the principal of which upon her death will go to their sons, Alfred G. Jr. and George. In addition to these bequests, [illegible] Vanderbilt devised to his wife his large holding in the Adirondacks, his houseboat, Venture, and all his real estate and personal property in England.

William H. Vanderbilt, now 14 years of age, receives, in addition to a liberal settlement made for him during his father's lifetime, a trust fund of $5,000,000, also the famous Oakland Farm at Portsmouth, R. I.

The residuary estate, estimated at about $15,000,000, is divided into two equal shares for Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt Jr. and George Vanderbilt, the children of his second wife. There were minor bequests to relatives and friends, but none to charity.

The legacies of the young sons will be held in trust for them until they are 21, when each is to receive outright the accumulated income and one-fourth the principal. At the ages of 25, 30 and 35 years, each son is to receive a quarter of the principal, the trusts, therefore, terminating when each is 35 years old.

Inherited Wealth of Father.

The bulk of the Vanderbilt millions came into the possession of Alfred G. Vanderbilt upon the death of his father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, in 1899. At that time young Vanderbilt, just out of Yale, was in Japan on a tour of the world he had planned to last two years.

He hurried home and, reading the will of his father, learned that he would have to wait until he was 30 before he would come into any appreciable part of the fortune. Then he was to receive half. At 35 he was to receive the other half. Vanderbilt was 37 last October. Cornelius, the older brother, cut off in the will with only a million dollars, received $6,000,000 more as a gift from Alfred.

Relatives and friends receive bequests ranging from $1000 to $500,000 and totaling about $1,650,000. Vanderbilt's brother, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, receives $500,000; his uncle, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, $200,000; Frederick M. Davies, $500,000; Henry B. Anderson, $200,000; Frederick L. Merriem, $250,000; Charles E. Crocker, $10,000, and Howard Lockwood, $1000. Employes of Oakland Farm, Sagamore Lodge, Camp Hillkare and Gloucester House in London, who have been in service for five years get a full year's wages.

In January, 1901, Vanderbilt was married in Newport, to Miss Elsie French, the daughter of Francis Ormonde French. They lived together five years. Mrs. Vanderbilt began suit for a divorce in April, 1908. The evidence in the case was never made public, but Mrs. Vanderbilt obtained a decree. Mr. Vanderbilt married Mrs. Smith Hollins Emerson McKim in London, Dec. 17, 1911. Mrs. McKim is a daughter of Capt. Isaac E. Emerson of Baltimore.

Coach to Eldest Son.

In 1908 Vanderbilt caused comment in fashionable circles here and abroad, by operating his coach line between London and Brighton over the Brighton road. His coach "venture" he bequeathed to his eldest son.

The fund which Vanderbilt left to his eldest son was over which he had the power of disposal, under the will of Cornelius Vanderbilt. It was explained by attorneys for the

MISSISSIPPI HERE TO REACH FLOOD STAGE THURSDAY

Forecaster Declares This Will Be Crest of Rise at St. Louis.

DAMAGE ON MERAMEC

Farms Under Water, Clubhouses Undermined and Tents Washed Away.

The Mississippi River continued to rise rapidly yesterday. Between 7 a. m. and 7 p. m. there was a rise of 1.6 feet, from 24.1 to 25.7 feet. The indications are that the river will continue to rise until Thursday, when it is expected to reach its crest, at 30 feet, which is the flood stage in St. Louis. It is not expected to go more than a few tenths of an inch above 30 feet.

In the five days between 7 a. m. Tuesday and 7 p. m. yesterday there was a rise of 10.1 feet. The readings for the week, taken at 7 a. m. each day, were: Monday, 15.6; Tuesday, 15.6; Wednesday, 17.1; Thursday, 19.9; Friday, 21.6; Saturday, 24.1.

The Weather Bureau yesterday, in a special river forecast, predicted that the Grand River will continue to rise, but will not reach the July (1909) record. The Osage will continue to rise for several days and will go above the flood stage. The Gasconade will not pass a bank-full stage, except in the lower river, where there will be backwater from the Missouri.

Missouri Is Above Flood Stage.

From Kansas City to its mouth the Missouri is now above flood stage, and it will continue to rise for several days. It is expected that a 26-foot stage will be reached at Waverly tomorrow, at Boonville Tuesday and at Herrmann Wednesday.

The Illinois River will reach a bank-full stage above the mouth of the Sangamon and will be slightly above flood stage below the Sangamon.

The Mississippi River, from Hannibal to Chester, will go above the flood stage At Grafton a stage of 19 feet will be reached tomorrow or Tuesday, and at Chester there will be a 30-foot stage next Friday.

The East St. Louis flood gates were ordered closed yesterday by G. Locke Tarlton, president of the East Side Levee Board, after the Weather Bureau special river forcast was issued. The outlet sewer, which discharges through the gate, is now being emptied by pumps that force the sewage over the top of the levee.

Water Backing Into Sewer.

It was found yesterday that the water had reached such a height that it was backing into the sewer, and the outward flow had almost ceased. The levee is built to withstand a rise in the river of 38 feet, which is two feet higher than the high mark in 1903.

The Meramec River reached a stage at Meramec Highlands and Valley Park last night of about 22 feet, the highest it has been during this rise. It rose two feet yesterday and was rising last night at the rate of an inch an hour, but information from Moselle, Mo., 60 miles up-stream, was that it had reached its crest there and was beginning to fall.

Farms Are Under Water.

Most of the lowland farms along both sides of the Meramec are under water and the losses on the farm crop are heavy. Between Fenton and Kimmswick hundreds of acres of corn fields are under water.

Along the river between Eureka and Fenton, private clubhouses have been damaged and tents set up during the last week by campers have been washed away. In the east end of Valley Park, known as low town, a dozen families have had to flee from their homes.

COMPLAINT BOARD ASKED TO MUFFLE CATHEDRAL BELLS

Mrs. T. H. McKittrick Declares Angelus at 6 A. M. Disturbs Her Sleep.

The angelus bells at the New Cathedral Chapel and at the Sacred Heart Convent, which ring for 90 seconds every morning at 6 o'clock, have been keeping Mrs. Thomas H. McKittrick of 4949 Berlin avenue awake so much recently that she has written to the Complaint Board to see if something can be done to let her sleep. She is the wife of the president of the Hargadine-McKittrick Dry Goods Co., which recently quit business.

Mrs. McKittrick, in her letter to Chairman Hanford Crawford of the Complaint Board, stated that she suffers greatly from insomnia. It is becoming a very serious matter, she says, to be awakened every day at such an early hour. The letter states that other members of the family also are greatly annoyed by what she terms "unnecessary noise."

Mrs. McKittrick's "kik" was referred by the Complaint Board to Associate City Counselor Young for advice. The counselor decided such matters should be dealt with by the police.

Chief of Police Young yesterday, however, said it was not for the Police Department to inject itself into such a complaint. Any action, he said, would have to be taken only on instructions from the city's Law Department. The two departments are in an "after-you, Alfonso," attitude.

The Rev. Father Francis Gilfillan, pastor of New Cathedral, when told of the complaint, said he slept on the Cathedral premises at Newstead and Maryland avenues, with the windows open, and that the Angelus never disturbs his slumbers at 6 a. m.

"The angelus, which we sound at 6 a. m., at noon and at 6 p. m., is not very noisy," Father Gilfillan said. "It never before has caused any complaints from any residents in the vicinity. There is quite a hill between the cathedral and the McKittrick home, and I should think the sound of the angelus would be very faint at that point."

PRESIDENT SEES BALL GAME

WASHINGTON, May 29.—President Wilson forgot pressing international questions for a short time today in his interest in a college ball game. His automobile passed the Maryland Agricultural College, where the local team was playing the nine from St. John's College, Annapolis.

The President ordered his car stopped and remained for several minutes to watch the game. He bowed smilingly to the students who recognized him.

AVIATORS IN NIGHT RAID DROP MANY BOMBS ON VENICE

Several Fires Near Arsenal Are Started and Explosion Occurs in Fort.

VIENNA, via London, May 29.—In an air raid on Venice last night by several naval airmen, a large number of bombs were dropped, causing several extensive fires in and near an arsenal. Another bomb caused an explosion in Fort Nicolo. News of the raid is given in an official statement issued tonight by the war office, which says:

"Last night several naval airmen undertook a new action against Venice, dropping a great number of bombs, especially on an arsenal, causing several extensive fires and in Fort Nicolo an explosion.

The Italians have reached the frontier place of Ala and the district of Primiere. In the coast district, minor fighting has developed near Karfreit. Near Gorisia five attacks have been repulsed."

PRESIDENT PREPARED TO CONTROVERT POINTS RAISED BY GERMANY

British Government to Give Assurances That Lusitania Was Not Naval Vessel and Was Not Armed.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Until the official text of the German reply to the American note concerning violations of neutral rights in the war zone is received, probably tomorrow, President Wilson will reserve comment.

This word came from the White House tonight after press dispatches outlining the German note were received.

It is known, however, that the United States Government is prepared to controvert every one of the points mentioned in the summary of the German position as published here. The press outline conforms with Ambassador Gerard's dispatches of the last few days forecasting the nature of the German reply. Evidence of an indisputable character was gathered by the Washington Government prior to the sending of the note of May 13, to prove that the Lusitania carried no guns, either mounted or unmounted; that she carried no explosives within the meaning of American statutes and that no British vessels have cleared from American ports for several months carrying guns of any character.

The British Ambassador here is preparing to transmit assurances from the British Government that the Lusitania was not armed and that she could not be carried on the naval lists as an auxiliary cruiser unless she were armed and commissioned, the change from a peaceful merchantman to an auxiliary cruiser being possible, according to British practice, only in home ports.

The United States moreover holds that the carrying of arms or ammunition or other contraband of a few unarmed individuals who might be prospective soldiers does not destroy the right under international law and humanity of the belligerent merchantman to be visited and searched before being destroyed and the neutral or noncombatant passengers transferred to a place of safety.

While the exact phraseology of the German reply is awaited with much interest there was a feeling of pessimism in many quarters over the reported evasion of President Wilson's demands for reparation for the loss of more than 100 American lives and guarantees that submarine warfare would be so conducted in the future as to safeguard American lives and vessels.

Secretary Bryan Expects to Receive Note This Morning

WASHINGTON, May 29.

SECRETARY BRYAN tonight announced that he expected the German note to arrive at the State Department tomorrow forenoon and that he would probably be in a position to give it out for publication Monday morning. If the note reaches the State Department tomorrow morning, it will break all cable records, as far as the State Department is concerned, which have been established since the war began.

The note, as far as the State Department is advised, was written in German and, therefore, it was necessary for a member of the embassy staff at Berlin to translate it before it could be coded and prepared for the cable. After it was translated several hours probably were consumed in putting it into the State Department code. It then would be sent through Copenhagen or The Hague to London, where Ambassador Page would put it on the cable for New York, whence it would be sent over a direct wire to the State Department, where Dr. Buck, chief of the index division of the department, will decode it. The decoding task probably will take [illegible] hours.

[illegible] soon as the full text is decoded four typewritten copies will be made. One of them will go to the President, another to Secretary Bryan and a third to Counsellor Lansing. The fourth copy will be filed in the department archives.

Naval Attache and Constructor Have no Doubt Nebraskan Was Torpedoed

A grave factor has been added to the situation by the finding of the American commission appointed by Ambassador Page that the American steamer Nebraskan was torpedoed without warning by a submarine. In German quarters the claim was persistent that the vessel struck a mine.

Lieut. John H. Towers, naval attache, and Naval Constructor Lewis B. McBride of the American Embassy, and Consul Washington at Liverpool have reported through Ambassador Page that after a technical examination of the vessel and on the testimony of the chief engineer of the Nebraskan that he saw the wake of a torpedo, they had no doubt that the ship was attacked by a submarine. Inasmuch as submarines of the allied Powers have not attacked merchantmen, the presumption of officials is similar to that reached after an investigation of the attack on the Gulflight—that a German submarine

QUESTIONS AMERICA'S STATEMENTS AS TO STATUS OF CUNARDER

Repeats Charge That Liner Was Naval Auxiliary Carrying Passengers to Safeguard Contraband.

SUGGESTS ARBITRATION OF POINTS IN DISPUTE

Official Reply to President Wilson's Note of May 13th Is Given to Ambassador Gerard—Text Not Yet Received at Washington.

By Associated Press.

BERLIN, May 29, via London, 6:25 p. m.—Germany's answer to President Wilson's note of May 13 on the sinking of the Lusitania was delivered this morning to Ambassador Gerard who immediately started the embassy staff to work coding the note and transmitting it to Washington. The German reply was signed by Foreign Minister von Jagow last night, and delivered at the American embassy by a functionary of the Foreign Office this morning.

As indicated previously in these dispatches, the note defers a direct answer to the questions raised by President Wilson, pending a further exchange of views.

Germany desires to establish whether the Lusitania was a defenseless merchant ship, or was being used for the transportation of war munitions and soldiers, on which unsuspecting passengers were permitted to take passage to safeguard the war materials.

The suggestion is made that cases in dispute be referred to The Hague for decision.

Regrets "Unintentional" Attacks on Cushing and Gulflight.

The reply expresses regrets for the "unintentional attacks" on the American steamers Gulflight and Cushing and offers to give compensation in any case in which Germany is found to be in the wrong.

The reply was signed by Herr von Jagow, the Foreign Minister, at 11 o'clock last night and delivered to Ambassador Gerard for transmission to Washington this morning.

The American representations regarding the torpedoing of the British steamer Falaba, in which an American citizen lost his life, are answered with the statement that it was intended to offer ample time for the passengers and crew to leave the ship.

The action of the captain in attempting to escape, however, necessitated more summary action. Even then the commander of the submarine granted 10 minutes for those on board to leave the vessel and subsequently extended the time to 25 minutes before sinking the ship.

The Cushing was attacked by German airmen in the North Sea and the Gulflight was torpedoed off Scilly Isands.

Reply From America on Lusitania Is Awaited.

The passages in the American note concerning a possible disavowal by Germany of intent to sink the Lusitania and the discontinuance of her present practice of submarine warfare are not mentioned specifically in the reply. The not states that pending the reply of the American Government to the German assumptions of fact refarding the real character of the Lusitania and her cargo, no attempt will be made to answer the demands contained in the American communication.

These assumption of fact are as follows:

The Lusitania was built as an auxiliary cruiser, subsidized and carried on the navy lists as such. She carried, according to German information, two guns, mounted and concealed below decks.

British steamers sailing from New York, according to information received from passengers and other sources, repeatedly carried soldiers, artillery, war supplies and contraband to England, the Lusitania on this trip carrying specifically 5400 cases of ammunition in addition to other war supplies and Canadian troops enroute to the front.

Reference is here made to the fact that carrying explosives on passenger steamers is contrary to American law. It is intimated that the German Government would be glad to receive information as to how it happened that ammunition was permitted to be shipped on the Lusitania, a vessel crowded with passengers. Strong phrases are used regarding what is considered as apparently the deliberate policy of British shipping companies to protect war shipments by embarking American passengers on the ships.

Wants to Know Whether Safety Regulations Were Observed.

Germany contends it is impossible to settle the question whether proper opportunity was given to place passengers and crew in safety until it is determined whether the regulations adopted after the sinking of the Titanic, regarding a proper supply of boats and watertight bulkheads, which are now a part of the American law were observed in the case of the Lusitania.

Finally, the American proposals designed to end submarine warfare, and the throttling of food supplies and other contraband for Germany are recalled. The Government expresses the desire to know what steps if any had been taken to induce Great Britain to embark on negotiations to this end, after Germany indicated her willingness to discuss a settlement on this general basis.

The delivery of the note to Ambassador Gerard was not attended with any special ceremony. A functionary of the Foreign Office carried it across the square to the American embassy, where it was placed in the hands of the American Ambassador. The embassy staff immediately began coding the message and transmitting it to Washington. Gerard meantime called on the Foreign Office.

America's Proposal to Germany and England to Which Germany Refers in Reply

The American proposal to England and Germany that submarine attacks on merchant ships be discontinued and that foodstuffs be allowed to enter Germany, to which Germany refers in her note of yesterday, was made on Feb. 21. The purpose of the proposal was to insure to neutral commerce its rights under international law and former usage.

It was proposed that both belligerents should agree not to sow floating mines on the high seas; that neither should plant anchored mines except within cannon range of harbors for defensive purposes only, and that all mines should bear the stamp of the Government planting them and should be so constructed that they would become harmless on being broken from their anchorages. It was also provided that neither belligerent should use submarines to attack merchant vessels of any nationality except to enforce the right of visit and search, and that no belligerent merchant vessel should fly a neutral flag as a disguise or ruse of war.

Germany, on her part, was to agree that all importations of foodstuffs from the United Sttaes should be consigned to agencies designated by the United States Government, which would undertake to see that such importations reached only civilians and that the German army should get none of them.

Great Britain, in turn, was to agree that foodstuffs should not be made contraband and that shipments of such commodities would not be interfered with or detained by British authorities if consigned to agencies designated by the United States Government in Germany.

On March 1—Germany notified the United States that the terms of this joint proposition, in so far as they were applicable to her, were satisfactory and that she would agree to them.

On March 15—The English Government's reply to the American proposal was a criticism of the German reply, which, it was charged, did not commit the German Government to an abandonment of its submarine attacks on merchant ships and the use of mines on the high seas, though Germany had indicated its coincidence specifically with each point. It further attacked the German conduct of the war, accusing that nation of committing atrocities in Belgium, of abusing British officers and troops whom she had captured on the field of battle, of laying mines in the high seas under the protection of a neutral flag and of attacking by aircraft and battleships unfortified and open towns on the British coast. The tenor of her note was that she had come to regard Germany as an outlaw nation, to which she would make no concessions designed either to reduce the horrors of war for her civilian population or to accommodate the commerce of neutrals.

On the same day England issued her now celebrated Order in Council, the purpose of which was to prevent all goods and supplies of any kind from reaching Germany. The first provision runs as follows:

"No merchant vessel, which sailed from her port of departure after March 1, 1915, shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage to any German port. Unless this vessel receives a pass enabling her to proceed to some neutral or allied port, to be named in the pass, the goods on board any such vessel must be discharged in a British port and placed in custody of the marshal of the court. Goods so discharged, if not contraband of war, if not requisitioned for the use of His Majesty, shall be restored by order for the court and upon such terms as the court may, in the circumstances, deem to be just to the person entitled thereto."

Under this provision England and her allies have seized and impounded every neutral ship they have been able to catch, whose cargo they even suspected would reach Germany, however indirectly. Thirty-six American ships with American cargoes aboard were seized and held for the action of British courts.

CAPTAIN THOUGHT GULFLIGHT WAS A BRITISH SHIP

He Reported Presence of Patrol Boats Made Closer Inquiry Dangerous.

By Associated Press.

BERLIN, May 29.—The torpedoing of the steamship Gulflight is now established as due to a German submarine, the report of the commander of the submarine in question having been received by the Admiralty. The commander stated that when he first saw the Gulflight she was being convoyed by two patrol boats, and he concluded that she must be a British vessel or was carrying contraband. The presence of the patrol boats, the commander reported, made closer investigation dangerous.

President to Controvert Points Raised by Germany was responsible and an inquiry to the German Foreign Office for its report on the case is expected to go forward within a day or two.

The preponderance of evidence showing an attack on the Nebraskan after it was believed that submarine attacks on vessels would cease, at least while the negotiations were in progress, admittedly increased the tension in relations with Germany. In German quarters it was suggested that if the ship was attacked by a German submarine, the commander may have been away from his base too long to learn of the new developments and the precautions to be taken to neutral ships.

The fact that the Nebraskan had hauled down her flag at dark also was mentioned as a possible reason for suspecting that she was an enemy vessel, although Capt. Greene in his affidavit declares the name of his ship was painted on her sides in letters six feet high and that it was possible for a submarine commander to see them.

Neutrals Warned by Germany.

Incidentally, the State Department received from Ambassador Gerard today a circular issued by the German Government, warning neutral vessels to keep their names illuminated at night and bear as many distinguishing marks as possible, because of the possibility of mistaken attacks.

Secretary Bryan declined to comment on the Nebraskan case, referring inquirers to an examination of the facts as given out in a formal statement during the day. He said also that he had received up to a late hour tonight no word as to when the German note would be received here, but on the assumption that it had been presented to Ambassador Gerard this forenoon, he estimated that with the time required for translation from German in Berlin and the enciphering of the communication, it might not reach Washington until late tomorrow. Messages have been delayed on an average of 24 hours in coming from Berlin to Washington via Copenhagen and London, the route by which official messages are sent to the State Department.

While officials did not care to comment on the German reply until they [illegible] read the text the forecast of its [illegible] was looked upon in well-in[illegible] quarters as not difficult to answ[illegible] because the American Government had [illegible] a careful investigation of the facts in the case before sending the note.

The claim of Germany that the Lusitania was built as an auxiliary cruiser and was carried on the British navy lists as such is met with the statement that the British Government had never published the Lusitania on its navy list and that such action was necessary before it could be considered as an auxiliary cruiser. Also, the Lusitania carried no guns, either mounted or dismounted, according to the investigation by Collector Malone at New York before the vessel sailed. There has been a distinct understanding between the United States and Great Britain, it was stated, that none of her merchantmen sailing from the United States should be armed. The fact that a merchantman subsequently might become an auxiliary cruiser is recognized as a possibility, but the United States has always understood the British position to be that such a change could not be accomplished during a voyage and only in a home port.

Not Contrary to Law.

Carrying of arms and ammunition is not contrary to American law, as the German reports claim, Federal statutes being directed against the transportation of self-exploding material, from which class official rulings many years ago excluded fixed ammunition.

Germany's contention that it is impossible to settle the question of whether proper opportunity was given the passengers to escape until it is determined whether the Lusitania was equipped with the lifeboats and appurtenances provided for in regulations adopted after the Titanic sank, was looked upon in official quarters as irrelevent because, it was pointed out, the torpedoing of the Lusitania without a moment's warning made it impossible to launch such lifeboats as the ship did carry.

From the brief outline, it was not believed that the German note went beyond the circular of May 11, which promised to express regrets and make reparation for mistaken attacks on neutral vessels. In the American note of May 13, to which the German note of today is a reply, it was pointed out that such promises did not remove the dangers to which Americans and their vessels were subject. The absence in the forthcoming note of any promises to safeguard American lives on unarmed merchantmen of any nationality and the failure to disavow intention to destroy American lives on the Lusitania produced a feeling of distinct disappointment in many quarters.

Speculation was widespread as to the Washington Government's course. It was believed the German note would be promptly answered with a statement of facts as understood by the United States and a reiteration of the demand for reparation for past events and guarantees as to the future.

This prediction was based, however, on no comment from the White House, but on the general trend of comment among officials familiar with President Wilson's viewpoint as expressed on previous occasions.

Port Collector's Report Denied Lusitania Sailed With Arms.

NEW YORK, May 29.—When Germany first charged that the Lusitania was "armed with guns," Collector of the Poht Malone said:

"This report is not correct. The Lusitania was inspected, as was customary. No guns were found, mounted or unmounted, and the vessel sailed without any armament. No merchant ship would be allowed to arm in this port and leave the harbor."

SUBMARINES SINK TWO BRITISH SHIPS

Captain and Five Sailors of One Vessel Drowned When Trying to Launch Boat.

LIVERPOOL, May 29.—The Elder Dempster Line steamer Ethiope has been torpedoed and sunk by the German submarine U24.

The new British steamer Spennymoor has been sunk by a German submarine off Start Point, Orkney Islands. The captain and five men of the crew of the steamer were drowned by the capsizing of the boat while it was being launched and the engineer was badly injured by the bursting of a shell in the engine room. Twenty-three survivors of the disaster have landed at Falmouth.

The Ethiope was bound from Hull to Liverpool, when she was to have sailed for East African ports.

The Ethiope, of 2745 tons net, was built in 1906 and was owned in Liverpool. She was 340 feet long.

A dispatch from Falmouth said that the steamer Saxonian brought into that port late last night Capt. McDonald and 16 members of the crew of the Ethiope. They were picked up when drifting about in a small boat. Sixteen other members of the crew, in another boat, have not been reported.

The Ethiope was proceedings down the channel at 9:30 o'clock last night when a shot crossed her bows. A submarine, which appeared to be about 300 feet long came into sight. The Ethiope attempted to escape, but two more shots were fired and the vessel stopped.

The commander of the submarine gave the men on the Ethiope five minutes in which to take to the boats and then torpedoed the steamer. She sank in five minutes.

Nebraskan Placed in Dry Dock; 20-Foot Hole in Side.

LIVERPOOL, May 30.—The American steamer Nebraskan was placed in dry dock yesterday at Brikenhead in the presence of the American naval attache, Lieut. John H. Towers, British naval officers and other experts. The vessel showed a huge gap forward on the starboard side, 20 feet long and 12 feet deep, at the bottom of the ship. which at this point had been blown away. All the plates surrounding this gap were curved inward.

SUIT TO STOP MAKING OF SHELLS IS DISMISSED

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 29.—Circuit Judge William J. Turner in a lengthy ruling today dismissed the action of Gen. Samuel Pearson in which he sought to restrain the Allis-Chalmers company, Otto H. Falk and others from manufacturing shrapnel shells, which, it was alleged, were being supplied to the allies.

The court concludes that in view of the well settled principles of international law it must be apparent that the relief sought by the plaintiff is political rather than legal.

W. C. T. U. TREASURER IS DEAD

Germany Warns American Shipping Against Traversing the War Zone Incautiously

WASHINGTON, May 29.

A WARNING to American shipping against traversing the naval war zone incautiously and to have all neutral markings displayed as conspicuously as possible, including illumination at night, was communicated to the State Department today by the German Government through the American embassy at Berlin, independently of the German reply to the American note on the Lusitania.

lished that the sinking was trace-

The German warning was announced in a statement made public by the State Department. It said:

"The American Ambassador at Berlin has been informed by the German Foreign Office that, in view of the fact that during the last few weeks it has repeatedly occurred that neutral ships have been sunk in the waters designated as an area of maritime war by the German Admiralty on Feb. 4, 1915, and especially in one case where it was estab-able to an attack by a German submarine which, in the darkness, took the neutral ship for an English vessel, on account of the inadequate illumination of its neutral distinctive markings, it recommended that American circles again be warned against traversing the area of maritime war incautiously, and, also, urged to make the neutral markings as plain as possible, especially to have them illuminated promptly and sufficiently at night."

Furious Struggle for Possession of Przemysl Continues

compared with what is going on around Przemysl.

The Germans and Austrians, with an enormous weight of artillery, continue to fight desperately in an effort to encircle the fortress, which is already reported to be under bombardment. The armies on the San to the north of Przemysl, have, however, apparently received a check. The Russians, after driving them back across the San in the neighborhood of Sieniawa, have now turned their attention to the forces which crossed the river to the south and south of Jaroslau and have been delivering furious attacks.

To the southeast of Przemysl, the Teutonic allies are meeting with more success, but their progress is not so rapid as it was a few days ago and the communications to Lemberg, which were reported to have been severed, are still intact. At the other end of the line in the Baltic provinces heavy fighting also is in progress with the fortunes ebbying and flowing.

Except for their admission of the evacuation of Ablain, which they say was carried out without the knowledge of the French, the Germans say they have repulsed all attacks along the Western line. It is not expected that the French will make any marked advance at one time, for they are attacking strongly fortified positions, which have to be taken one by one in the face of innumerable and cleverly concealed machine guns.

Rumor in Washington Says Holland Is to Join Allies.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The American prints a Washington dispatch saying army officers and diplomats are discussing a rumor that the allies are making every endeavor to bring Holland into the war and that her alliance with the allies may be expected soon.

The story continues, that should Holland join the allies, England would land 1,000,000 men immediately and invade Germany, while her main armies are fighting at the frontiers.

ITALIANS HAVE MASK FOR GASES

BOLOGNA, Italy, May 29.—Senator Giacomo Ciamician, who is a professor of chemistry at the University of Bologna, has presented to the military authorities a new mask intended to neutralize the effects of asphyxiating gases.

The mask, which was invented by Signora Branca Bordoli, is made of gause. The women of Bologna already are making large quantities of the masks for the army.

7,000,000-POUND CANNED BEEF ORDER RECEIVED FROM ITALY

American Packers Now Fear no Obstacle in the Delivery of the Meat.

CHICAGO, May 29.—A 7,000,000-pound canned beef order from Italy was given American packers just before the declaration of war. It is divided between Armour & Co. and Libby, O'Neil & Libby, a corporation controlled by Swift & Co. The first shipment is now on the way to the Mediterranean.

For the first time since hostilities began, the packers fear no obstacle in the delivery of the meat.

The packers have cooled on war orders. With $10,000,000 worth of various meats tied up in British ports, much of it damaged now, and with a prospect of facing huge losses in selling to neutrals, there is not that enthusiasm over war orders that marked the beginning of the war.

Big orders are still coming from England and France, but the demand by Holland and the Scandinavian countries has fallen off.

POINCARE ANNOUNCES HE NEVER DRINKS ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS

President of France Replies to Request From League That He Abstain During War.

PARIS, May 29.—Raymond Poincare, the President of the French Republic, today, replying to a request made by the National Anti-Alcoholic League, sent through his secretary the following letter:

"You ask the President of the Republic to follow the example of other heads of states and take an agreement to abstain from all spirituous liquors during the war. That is an engagement the President takes willingly and without difficulty, not only for the duration of the war, but even afterward. He never drinks alcoholic liquors."

BLOOD TRANSFUSION TRIED TO SAVE LIFE OF G. D. BARNARD

Nephew and Two Other Persons Each Give Pint; Others May Volnteer.

An effort is being made, by blood transfusion, to save the life of George D. Barnard, millionaire president of George D. Barnard & Co., who is in a critical condition at Barnes Hospital.

George B. Gannett of 4457 Forest Park boulevard, nephew of Barnard, and two other persons have each given a pint of blood for the benefit of the patient. If his condition does not improve, the blood of half a dozen other volunteers will be used.

If Barnard gains sufficient strength he will undergo a major operation. He is 63 years old.

RIDDER'S DEFUNCT FIRM SAID TO HAVE BRITISH WAR ORDER

New York Editor's Son Still Declared to Be Active in New York Factory.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The New York American prints the following: "The International Typesetting Machine Co., of which Herman Ridder is president, is tiding over its financial difficulties by making war munitions for the British Government. Mr. Ridder, who is also president and editor of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung, has already attracted world-wide attention by his persistent and vigorous condemnation of the exportation of arms and ammunition from the United States to the allies.

"The International Typesetting Machine Co. is at present executing in its Brooklyn factory an order for 1400 aeroplane parts, according to plans furnished directly by the British Government.

"Workmen in the Ridder plant are executing one large contract for Great Britain, according to sketches bearing the imprint of the Royal Aircraft Factory of Farnborough, England, which is operated by the British War Office.

Joseph E. Ridder, son of Herman Ridder, and secretary and treasurer of the International Typesetting Machine Co., has a desk in the factory in the same room with Capt. Charles D. Palmer, the personal representative of Erskine Hewitt, the receiver.

"Although Herman Ridder has said that he has surrendered the company's management to the receiver, his son has been found to be in close and constant touch with the receiver's representative at the Ridder factory and to be constantly inspecting the work of employes.

"When shown a photographic fac simile of the Royal Aircraft factory sketches neither Joseph E. Ridder, Capt. Palmer nor William H. Orpen, superintendent of the Ridder factory, attempted to deny that it represented a large British war order. Joseph E. Ridder said his father had nothing more to say on the subject. Receiver Hewitt refused to see newspapermen."

AMERICAN, ADMIRAL IN TURKISH NAVY, DEAD AT CONSTANTINOPLE

Ransford, D. Bucknam, Known as Bucknam Pasha, Entered Service Under Abdul Hamid.

CONSTANTINOPLE, via London, May 29.—Bucknam Pasha, an American citizen, who was formerly Rear Admiral in the Turkish navy, died on May 27, after several weeks of illness. He leaves a widow, who is now in the Turkish capital. The funeral, which took place at Constantinople yesterday, was attended by most of the members of the American colony.

Bucknam Pasha, or Ransford D. Bucknam, brought the Turkish armored cruiser Medjidish from Philadelphia, where it was built for the Sultan at the Cramps Ship Yard, several years ago. On arriving here he was asked by Abdul Hamid, the predecessor of the present Turkish Sultan, to enter the Ottoman naval service. He became naval adviser to the former Sultan, and in that capacity he was entrusted with several important missions.

Text of American Note to Which Germany Has Replied

Following is the full text of the American note to which Germany replied yesterday, reprinted from the Post-Dispatch of May 14, the day it was cabled to Berlin:

"Department of State, Washington, May 13, 1915.

"The Secretary of State to the American Ambassador at Berlin:

"Please call on the Minister of Foreign Affairs and after reading to him this communication leave with him a copy.

"In view of recent acts of the German authorities in violation of American rights on the high seas, which culminated in the torpedoeing and sinking of the British steamship Lusitania, on May 7, 1915, by which over 100 American citizens lost their lives, it is clearly wise and desirable that the Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government should come to a clear and full understanding as to the grave situation which has resulted.

"The sinking of the British passenger steamer Falaba by a German submarine, on March 28, through which Leon C. Thresher, an American citizen, was drowned; the attack, on April 28, on the American vessel Cushing by a German aeroplane; the torpedoing, on May 1, of the American vessel Gulflight by a German submarine as a result of which two or more American citizens met their death, and finally the torpedoing and sinking of the steamship Lustiania constitute a series of events which the Government of the United States has observed with growing concern, distress and amazement.

Recalling the humane and enlightened attitude hitherto assumed by the Imperial German Government in matters of international right, and particularly with regard to the freedom of the seas; having learned to recognize the German views and the German influence in the field of international obligations as always engaged upon the side of justice and humanity; and having understood the instructions of the Imperial German Government to its naval commanders to be upon the same plane of humane action prescribed by the naval codes of other nations, the Government of the United States was loath to believe—it cannot now bring itself to believe—that these acts, so absolutely contrary to the rules, the practices and the spirit of modern warfare, could have the countenance or sanction of that great Government. It feels it to be its duty, therefore, to address the Imperial German Government concerning them with the utmost frankness and in the earnest hope that it is not mistaken in expecting action on the part of the Imperial German Government which will correct the unfortunate impressions which have been created and vindicate once more the position of that Government with regard to the sacred freedom of the seas.

"The Government of the United States has been apprised that the Imperial German Government considered themselves to be obliged by the extraordinary circumstances of the present war and the measures adopted by their adversaries in seeking to cut Germany off from all commerce, to adopt methods of retaliation, which go much beyond the ordinary methods of warfare at sea, in the proclamation of a war zone from which they have warned neutral ships to keep away. This Government has already taken occasion to inform the Imperial German Government that it cannot admit the adoption of such measures or such a warning of danger to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality; and that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of those rights, intentional or incidental. It does not understand the Imperial German Government to question those right. It assumes, on the contrary, that the Imperial Government accept as of course, the rule that the lives of the non-combatants whether they be of neutral citizenship or citizens of one of the nations at war, cannot lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unarmed merchantman, and recognize also, as all other nations do, the obligation to take the usual precaution of visit and search to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag.

"The Government of the United States therefore desires to call the attention of the Imperial German Government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection of their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity, which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantsman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her, and, if they cannot put a prize crew on board of her, they cannot sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her to the mercy of the sea in her small boats. These facts, it is understood, the Imperial German Government frankly admits. We are informed that in the instances of which we have spoken, time enough for even that poor measure of safety was not given, and in at least two of the cases cited not so much as a warning was received. Manifestly submarines cannot be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity.

"American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas, and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligation and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights.

"There was recently published in the newspapers of the United States, I regret to inform the Imperial German Government, a formal warning purporting to come from the Imperial Embassy at Washington, addressed to the people of the United States and stating in effect that any citizen of the United States who exercised his right of free travel upon the seas, would do so at his peril if his journey should take him within the war zone of water within which the Imperial German Navy was using submarines against the commerce of Great Britain and France,. notwithstanding the respectful, but very earnest protest of this Government the Government of the United States. I do not refer to this for the purpose of calling the attention of the Imperial German Government at this time to the surprising irregularity of a communication from the Imperial German Embassy at Washington addressed to the people of the United States through the newspapers, but only for the purpose of pointing out that no warning that an unlawful and inhumane act would be committed can possibly be accepted as an excuse or palliation for that act or as an abatement of the responsibility for its commission.

"Long acquainted as this Government has been with the character of the Imperial German Government and with the high principles of equity by which they have in the past been actuated and guided, the Government of the United States cannot believe that the commanders of the vessel which committed these acts of lawlessness did so except under a misapprehension of the orders issued by the Imperial German naval authorities. It takes it for granted that, at least within the practical possibilities of every such case, the commanders even of submarines were expected to do nothing that would involve the lives of noncombatants or the safety of neutral ships, even at the cost of failing of their object of capture or destruction. It confidently expects therefore that the Imperial German Government will disavow the acts of which the Government of the United States complains, that they will make reparation so far as reparation is possible for injuries which are without measure, and that they will take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence, of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare for which the Imperial German Government have in the past so wisely and so firmly contended.

"The Government and people of the United States look to the Imperial German Government for just, prompt and enlightened action in this vital matter, with the greater confidence because the United States and Germany are bound together, not only by special ties of friendship, but also by the explicit stipulation of the treaty of 1828 between the United States and the Kingdom of Prussia.

"Expressions of regret and offers of reparation in case of the destruction of neutral ships sunk by mistake, while they may satisfy international obligations if no loss of life results, cannot justify or excuse a practice, the natural and necessary effect of which is to subject neutral nations and neutral persons to new and immeasurable risks.

"The Imperial German Government will not expect the Government of the United States to omit any word or act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment.

"BRYAN."

WHITE BOOK GIVES GERMANY'S REPLY TO CHARGES OF CRUELTY IN BELGIUM

CITIZENS EXECUTED BY TROOPS BECAUSE THEY VIOLATED WAR RULES

Berlin Government Declares Civilian Population, After First Showing Friendliness, Assassinated and Maltreated Soldiers, for Which They Were Hunted Out of Concealment and Shot and Their Houses Burned.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

AMSTERDAM, May 29.—The German Government has just issued a White Book in reply to charges of extreme and unwarranted cruelty to civilians in Belgium, made against German troops in two official reports.

The first of these reports was made public in Washington, Sept. 16, 1914, by a commission sent to the United States by the Belgian Government.

The second report is that of the British Commission, headed by Viscount Bryce, made public simultaneously in London and Washington, May 12.

In its White Book the German Government says:

"Immediately after the outbreak of the present war a wild fight of the entire people against the German troops broke out, which forms a flagrant violation of international rights and which had most serious results for the country of Belgium and her people.

Citizens Tried to Delay Germans.

"This war, fought by people excited to the highest passion, lasted during the entire advance of the German army through Belgium. As the Belgian army, after stubborn fights, retreated before the German troops, the Belgian civilian population in all parts of the country not yet occupied by Germans endeavored by all means to delay the German advance.

"They did not hesitate, in places which already had been occupied by German troops, to hurt and weaken the German army through cowardly attacks.

"That the Belgian civilian population of every rank, age and sex, with the greatest fury and rage, took part in fights against the German troops is proved by overwhelming material founded on official, and in many cases, sworn testimony.

"According to material in hand, the Belgian civilian population in numerous places in the provinces of Liege, Luxemburg, Namur, Henegau, Brabant, East and West Flanders fought against German troops, and the fight was particularly terrible in character at Aerschot, Ardenne, Dinant and Liege, of which special reports have been received by the German War Department from special military commissions appointed to look into violations of the rules of war.

"According to these, men of various professions and trades, working men, manufacturers, physicians, school teachers, nay, even priests and women and children, were caught with arms in hand in parts of the country from which the Belgian regular troops had retired long ago. Shots were fired at the German troops from houses, gardens, roofs, cellars, fields and woods. During these fights means were used which certainly would never have been used by regular troops and there were, therefore, many wounds from shotguns and scalds from hot tar and boiling water.

"Against International Rules."

"The war which the Belgian civilian population conducted was entirely against generally recognized rules of international rights as expressed in articles 1 and 2 of the treaty of The Hague as signed by Belgium."

Then follow the rules:

"Article 1—The laws, rights and duties of war apply not only to armies, but also to militia and volunteer corps, fulfilling the following conditions: 1: To be commanded by a person responsible for his subordinates; 2: To have a fixed distinctive emblem recognizable at a distance; 3: To carry arms openly and, 4: To conduct their operations in accordance with the laws and customs of war.

"In countries where militia or volunteer corps constitute the army, or form any part of it, they are included under the denomination 'army.'

"Article 2—The population of a territory which has not been occupied, who, on the enemy's approach, spontaneously take up arms to resist the invading troops without having time to organize themselves in accordance with article 1, shall be regarded as belligerent, if they respect the laws and customs of war."

Mingled With Civilians.

"For this reason," the German report says, "the Belgian franc-tireurs could not be considered to be organized bodies of militia or volunteers according to the rights of war. It makes no difference that apparently also militia individually and members of the Belgian Civil Guard took part in these, for as those individuals wore no military uniform and dressed in civilian clothes and mingled among fighting civilians they could make no claim to be considered belligerents.

"Belgian franc-tireurs have never fought openly and have throughout violated the laws and regulations of war. Incontestible proofs are at hand that in a great number of cases the German troops when they arrived were friendly. They were received by the Belgian civil population and then attacked with weapons as darkness came, or some other opportunity offered itself. Incidents of this kind happened at Belgny, Esneux, Grand Rosiere, Bevre, Gouvy, Villersde, Vantorval, Sainte Marie, Les Bulles, Yschippe, Acose, Aerschot, Ardenne and Liege.

"All these attacks openly violated the rules and international rights to carry arms openly.

"Violated Rules of War."

"What we principally accuse the Belgian population of is shameless violation of the rules of war in various places. For instance, at Liege, Brussels, Aerschot and Dinant, German soldiers have been murdered from behind, which violates the rule against assassination or wounding of members of hostile people or army. (Article 23, Paragraph 1-B of the treaty of The Hague).

"The Belgian people have besides paid no attention to the flag of the Red Cross, thus violating Article 9 of the Geneva convention especially. They have not hesitated to shoot at German troops protected by this flag and attack hospitals containing wounded soldiers, as well as surgeons and nurses performing their duties.

"Finally, it has been proved beyond any doubt that German wounded soldiers have been robbed and murdered, nay, even mutilated in a most horrible manner, and that even women and young girls have taken part in such horrible crimes. The German wounded soldiers have had their eyes gouged out, ears, noses, fingers cut off, their abdomen cut open, while in other cases the German soldiers have been poisoned, hanged in trees, sprinkled with burning fluids and burned in other manners so they died in a particularly painful manner.

"This beastly behavior on the part of the Belgian population not only against the express obligation to show respect and look after the sick and wounded of a hostile army (Article 1, paragraph 1, Geneva convention), but also a blow in the face of the first principles and rules of war and humanity. Under these circumstances the Belgian civilian population who took part in the fight had, of course, no right to claim to be treated as belligerents, but the instinct of self-preservation of the German army distinctly demanded that the sternest of measures be taken against these franc-tireurs. All of these persons who fought against the German troops therefore had to be killed and the prisoners taken could not be treated as prisoners of war, but as common murderers.

"Old Men, Women, Children Spared."

"In spite of this, we have, whenever it was not against the necessity of war, endeavored to preserve the rules of war, and prisoners were, whenever it was in any way possible, shot only after a regular examination or as sentenced by a court-martial.

"Old men, women and children, even when suspected, were spared as far as it was possible, and, although the patience of the German soldiers was tried to the utmost by these vicious attacks, they often in a most self-sacrificing manner cared for these people in every manner, rendering protection to the helpless, sharing their bread with them and nursing the weak and suffering.

"That the Belgian Government must take the blame for these violations of international rights by the people of Belgium, is beyond any doubt. It certainly would have been very easy for it, through its newspapers and through such officials as mayors, to give its soldiers and any members of the civil guard the necessary instructions so as to control the passions of the population, which had been purposely roused. The Belgian Government must therefore take full responsibility for the dreadful bloodshed which took place in Belgium.

"The incontestible fact that, from the very beginning, the German troops in Belgium were forced in the interest of self-preservation to fight against the population, may easily be proved by looking into the matter, through a commission from any part of the world.

"Accusations Against Army False."

"Tales told by refugees and again collected by the Belgian Commission, which called them absolutely unbiased, have every appearance of untruthfulness, if not of vicious fabrications. As matters stand, the commission was absolutely unable to test the correctness of the stories told to its members or to form any idea how things happened.

"Its accusations against the German army are therefore nothing but a base libel which is disproved by the material in our hands.

"At Aerschot the fight between German troops and the Belgian civil population was not caused, as has been said in England, by the fact that German officers violated the honor of the Mayor's daughter, but because the local population carried out a well-planned attack against the commander-in-chief and assassinated him from behind.

"At Dinant, the people who fell victims to the German arms were not innocent, peaceful citizens, but murderers, who cowardly attacked the German soldiers and forced the troops into a fight, which resulted in the destruction of the city.

"At Liege the fight with the civilian population was not caused because retreating German troops were by mistake attacked by their own comrades, but the misled population, who did not realize the inevitable results of such behavior, thought they could shoot down the retiring German troops without any danger to themselves. At Liege, as in other towns, German troops did not start firing the city until it was absolutely necessary.

"Caused by Absolute Necessity."

"The Imperial German Government believes the publication of the material in hand will prove beyond any doubt that the behavior of the German troops against the Belgian civilian population was caused entirely by the violation of international law by franc-tireurs and by the absolute necessity of war. On the other side, the German Government desires to express its strong condemnation of the population who carried on a dishonest fight, regardless of by what means, against the German soldiers, and its stronger condemnation of the Government which absolutely forgot its duties and gave free course to the mad passions of the population and which now does not feel ashamed of trying to cover up its own crimes by lying insults against the German army."

The four appendices which form part of the White Book give countless details of a great number of crimes alleged to have been committed by the Belgian civilian population. The following details are given of the assassination of Col. Stenger at Aerschot:

"The official Belgian commission and foreign press have mentioned what happened at Aerschot among their countless accusations against the German methods of war in Belgium. Neither of them could strongly enough emphasize the barbarian behavior of the German troops and officers against the harmless population and the absolute lack of necessity of inflicting punishment upon the peaceful town. What really happened and what has been proved by the sworn testimony of a number of disinterested witnesses gives us an entirely different picture.

"On Aug. 19, 1914, German soldiers of the Eighth Brigade infantry were sent to Aerschot. The staff of the brigade entered on that date the city, which apparently was absolutely calm. Col. Stengers, comander in chief of the brigade, sent his adjutant, Capt. Schwarz, ahead to find suitable quarters for the members of his staff.

"Capt. Schwarz was amicably received by the Mayor and his wife, and the Mayor indicated his own residence, situated on the Market square, as the best quarters here. The Colonel and his orderly, Lieutenant Beyersdorff, arrived between 4 and 5 in the afternoon.

"Intercourse between the officers billeted there and their host was in every way polite and friendly. At 8 o'clock in the evening a particularly loud shot rang out somewhere in the city which gave the signal for general firing at German troops that gathered in streets and on the square. Most of the shots came from windows in the roofs. All the doors and windows of the house from which the first shots were fired were locked and had to be burst open by troops. The house was set on fire and several civilians who tried to make their escape were seized. Many of them had arms in their hands and of these 88 adult men were shot as franc-tireurs.

"Col. Stenger had remained alone in his room in the Mayor's house. This house was plainly marked as headquarters staff of brigades by a poster on the door. Fully trusting in the pretended friendly feeling of the population Col. Stenger had spent the whole afternoon on the balcony outside his room, in full view of everybody. In the evening he remained in his room with the doors leading to the balcony open.

"When Capt. Schwarz and Lieut. Beyersdorff wanted to see him in the evening after 8 o'clock, and get orders concerning measures to be taken after the attack, they found Col. Stenger lying mortally wounded on the point of death in a brightly illuminated room, with the doors to the balcony opened. The physician who was immediately called could only confirm the fact that the Colonel was dead.

"Mayor's Family Took Part."

"The shots which were fired at the Colonel, therefore, must have been fired at a time when the violent firing of shots took place from the houses opposite his room. What had happened was a deliberate attack on the German troops, who were robbed of their chief, evidently in the hope that this would cause a panic. Search of the house, which took place immediately, proved that the family of the Mayor not only was aware of the hostilities but took part in them. From the cellar, which was locked and the keys which the family pretended had been mislaid, shots were fired into the streets, and in one of the cellar windows, an arrangement was found to make the position of the man who fired the shots more comfortable.

"A musketeer testified he had distinctly seen one of the shots fired from this house. The only person who could have committed this deed was the son of the Mayor, who had been hidden by the family, and who was brought out of his hiding place. As to the complicity of the family in the murder of the Colonel whom they had received in a friendly manner, it was proved beyond any doubt. The father and son were shot the next day, Aug. 20.

"The brother of the Mayor, in whose house the chief of gendarmes, Capt. Karge, who was also attacked, had been billeted at the suggestion of the Mayor, shared their fate. The participation of the entire family of the Mayor proves how deliberately the Belgian officials took part in such criminal actions against the German troops, which unfortunately were too frequent. At Aerschot this pernicious oficial participation amounted to the shameless assassination of the commander-in-chief."

Fight at Dinant Is Described.

The bloody fight at Dinant is described as follows:

"On Aug. 21 to 23, after the enemy had been driven out, Saxon regiments, Nos. 100, 108, 178, 182, were made the targets of violent firing from houses, and each house had to be attacked separately, hand grenades being used in several cases to drive out the inhabitants, who fortified themselves on every floor from cellar to garret, and who used all kinds of weapons.

"Those who were caught with arms in hand were shot immediately, while those who were merely suspected were taken to the Municipal prison as hostages.

"In spite of these preventions, the grenadiers were here again fired upon by the population and suffered considerable losses, especially in officers. Shots were even fired from the cathedral. Already during the forenoon, the commander of the Forty-sixth Bridage realized it would be impossible to control the fanatic population without the use of artillery.

"The troops, however, were so scattered, fighting among the houses, it was impossible to call them back immediately, and it was only at 3 o'clock in the afternoon it was possible to withdraw the regiments to the heights north of Dinant, so that the artillery, especially that part of the field artillery, Regiment No. 12, and one battery of heavy artillery, could shell Dinant.

"We finally succeeded in cleaning up the town in spite of the continued fanatic resistance of the inhabitants. Houses, according to the report, had been made into vertiable forts by the barring of doors and windows and the accumulation of great quantities of firearms and munitions. The presence of great quantities of munitions was proved by constant explosions in burning houses.

"Official reports expressly emphasized that the fighting Belgian civilians wore no military signs. The entire population had firmly, unanimously made up their minds to delay the German advance and they must blame themselves that part of them were killed during the dangerous task they deliberately set for themselves. The resistance was exceedingly stubborn. All classes, even priests, took part with men and women, old men and children.

"Shots were fired from the cellars of burning houses, and even while a platoon of our soldiers, executed some men of the franc-tireurs, they fired at them with revolvers, which they had concealed, in a most vicious and cowardly manner. The people, who themselves were invisible from without, fired through holes at detachments of soldiers passing by as well as at single officers. When German troops invaded the houses the people made their escape through numerous caves and subterranean passages to continue their murders in other places. Some of the male franc-tireurs wore women's clothes.

Says Troops Weren't Cruel.

"That troops of the corps did not show themselves hard or cruel is proved by numerous incidents in which they cared for women, old men and children. A number of women who had just given birth to babies and who were still in bed, were carried out of the endangered houses to safe places and placed on mattresses together with their own wounded. The wounded inhabitants (and in most cases their wounds were caused by the fire of the enemies themselves) were bandaged and given conscientious surgical treatment.

"Children who were found alone were handed over to women. A majority of the women and children coming from burning Dinant and arriving at Les Rivages, Aug. 24, were taken into houses and given food and drink. Next morning they all received coffee from the regimental field kitchen.

"Reports which surviving inhabitants of Dinant have made concerning the fighting about their city and the statements of the Belgian Commission founded on these, as well as stories of the enemies' press, are all characterized by the fact that, while they entirely conceal the part which the population took in the fighting against our troops, they purposely and in the most exaggerated manner relate what our troops did to prevent them."

Takes Up Rising at Louvain.

Concerning the popular uprising at Louvain, the report tells how relations between troops and inhabitants were entirely friendly. Not a single excess took place. The behavior of the German troops was praiseworthy, as even the Belgians admit. But the population of that city, too, showed great friendliness, so that the German soldiers at Louvain felt so safe many of them went without arms.

"This peaceful picture suddenly changed on Aug. 25, 1914," says the book. "On that date Belgian troops made a sortie from Antwerp in the direction of Louvain. German troops occupying Louvain went out to meet them, and the fight ended in the serious defeat of the Belgians, who, toward evening, were driven back into Antwerp. Evidently the inhabitants of Louvain, who, after the occupation of the city, had maintained constant secret communication with Antwerp, and who knew about the planned sortie of their countrymen, had not counted on such a result of the fight. They held the wrong opinion that the planned attempt to break through by the Belgian army, assisted by English troops, must meet with success, and they saw in the temporary advance of Belgian troops victory and encouragement to take part in the fight themselves.

"While the battle was still undecided a German company of the landsturm, who had held a position at the northwestern gate of Louvain, marched to a square in the eastern part of the city, near the railroad station, to complete their formation. The march toward the rear by the landsturm company and other small detachments of troops confirmed the impression of the inhabitants of Louvain that the Germans had been beaten and were retreating, and gave impulse to the execution of a plan, evidently prepared long beforehand, to annihilate the Germans as they marched back through the city.

"A short while after the companies arrived in the square in front of the railroad station and was at rest there in the evening, rockets were sent up in the city. At the same time the inhabitants of Louvain at this signal opened a furious fire upon German troops. They used guns, revolvers and pistols, from cellars, windows and principally from roofs. In many places it sounded as if machine guns were being used. In their fury the population fired at surgeons in the hospital for soldiers; on the sick and wounded, who were under the protection of the Red Cross, so little did they care for the rules of the Geneva convention. They even fired from houses from which Red Cross flags were flying and directed their fire against the hospitals.

"German Soldiers Mutilated."

"In single instances part of the population even committed dreadful cruelties against helpless German soldiers.

"A reservist found in the cellar of a house the dead body of a German soldier whose abdomen had been cut open with a sharp knife. Another German soldier was mutilated by furious inhuman inhabitants in such an atrocious manner that he died. Against these brutal attacks the German troops must use energetic measures, as they already had been warned.

"Those inhabitants who had taken part in the attack were shot and the houses from which the shots had been fired were burned. It was not possible to prevent the fire from spreading to other houses and destroying some streets. In this manner a cathedral also caught fire. Our troops prevented the fire from spreading further and under the guidance of officers they put out the fire in the most self-sacrificing manner."

"The following facts prove this rising was no accident, but had been prepared a long time beforehand, as already proved by the rockets, which gave the signal for the attack:

"1. The fact that weapons were found in great quantities, although these were supposed to have been surrendered on Aug. 19, according to the report of the Mayor.

"2. The observation which was made that a great number were in Louvain and were distributed all over the city.

"It was an easy thing for these to find rooms in hotels and in many rooms in boarding houses, which had been left vacant by students. Three burning houses, containing many boxes of cartridges and explosives, which had been hidden there by the population, exploded. According to this, what happened was a carefully planned attack, which lasted several days, during which the fight was carried on with the greatest stubbornness.

"Priests Took Part in Fighting."

"The Belgian Government itself has never dared to state that regular troops belonging to the Belgian army took part. It was a cowardly attack by franc-tieurers, who were willingly received and hidden by the people of Louvain. Crimes committed by the civil guard were revealed to the entire civilized world. At Louvain, unfortunately, a number of priests were fanatic enough to abuse their influence upon the people and advise them to receive franc-tireurs, and it was proved that a number of them even took a personal part in the fighting.

"Whoever reads the reports of the German Government concerning Louvain, which were not founded on observations of excited and in most cases uneducated people, but on a rational, calmly undertaken examination, must realize how worthless are similar accusations against German troops, which have been made by the Belgians. How little value the commission itself places upon its imaginary statements * * * is proved by the execution of Coenraet and Pater Schmidt. It speaks itself of an imaginary execution and adds to the story that involuntary witness to this imaginary scene were forced to show their approval by clapping of hands.

"It is not possible to produce stronger proof that this material was hurriedly gathered for the cause of making a sensation, regardless of truth and justice, than the fact, of which the Belgian Commission can hardly pretend to be ignorant, that Bishop Coenraet is even today safe and sound, living with Prof. Dr. Toels, in Jirien, in Holland."

Table d'Hote Meals to Be Abolished in Berlin Restaurants

BERLIN, May 29.

WITH the idea of still further preventing the waste of food supplies in this city, the Berlin authorities have promulgated new rules, to be observed by all restaurants in all parts of the city.

These regulations become effective June 1 and provide, first: Table d'hote meals are abolished; in the future only special orders will be filled. Second, the larger use of vegetables and restricted use of meat must be encouraged. Third, less roast meat and more boiled meat must be offered. Fourth, the use of fat must be decreased. Fifth, the use of potatoes must be limited to the lowest degree possible; only boiled and fried potatoes may be served.

Furthermore, the police will introduce new regulations for serving of meals, and they will forbid the presence in restaurants of neutral newspapers not friendly to Germany.

FREDERICK WRITES TO JUDGE WHO SENTENCED HIM TO PRISON

Thanks Him for Kindness to "Wretched Man Suffering Penalties of His Sins."

A. H. Frederick, recently sentenced to the Penitentiary for 10 years for forgery after being elected President of the Board of Aldermen, wrote a letter to Circuit Judge Jones a few days after he was imprisoned, in which he thanked the Judge for his kindness. The letter follows:

"Dear Judge Jones: Will you please accept my thanks for your kindness to me last Saturday. Your sympathetic and kind face at the time you sentenced me is always before me and will never be forgotten. May God bless you is the sincere hope and prayer of a poor wretched man who is suffering the penalties of his sins. Yours truly, A. H. FREDERICK."

Judge Jones thinks Frederick was grateful because he was not lectured from the bench when the sentence was imposed.

FIVE PERSONS IN CLAYTON FAMILY OVERCOME BY GAS

Leak Is Discovered in Connection in House Into Which They Had Just Moved.

F. W. Schweikert, a retired grocer, and his two daughters and two sons were overcome early yesterday by gas in their home at 512 Meramec avenue, Clayton, into which they had moved Friday. The gas leaked from a connection from the main pipe in the basement to a gas stove in the kitchen, which had been installed the day before.

Gertrude, 20 years old, had a headache and slept little all night. About 4 a. m. she smelled gas and then heard her brother, William, 13 years old, fall out of bed. She awakened her father, who went to the basement to turn off the gas. When he did not return in 10 minutes, she and her sister, Barbara, 22 years old, whom she had aroused, went down and found him trying to crawl up the steps. George, 15 years old, also was overcome.

Gertrude called neighbors, who turned off the gas and opened the windows. The family soon revived.

MINISTER ASSERTS PEACE OFFER WAS MADE TO RUSSIA

Sazanoff Says Austro-German Proposal for Separate Agreement Was Impossible of Acceptance.

MILAN, Italy, May 29.—Sergius Sazanoff, Russian Foreign Minister, interviewed by a correspondent of the Secolo, is quoted as saying it was true Austria and Germany attempted to conclude a separate peace with Russia, but that such a thing was impossible.

"All the allies are entirely in accord," Sazanoff continued.

"Consequently the war will continue until it is possible to conclude a really lasting peace. It will be a long, hard war, as the enemy is still strong.

"Knowledge of his strength must make us stronger and more persevering in our efforts to reach a definite result."

Sazonoff expressed the opinion that Italy, in terminating her alliance with Germany and Austria, had acted wisely. He asserted Italy's principal compensation for her present trouble would be acquisition of the commercial influence in the Balkans previously possessed by Austria and Germany.

Sazonoff urged that Italy cultivate good relations with the Slavs. Otherwise, he said, the Dalmatian coast, which had been assigned to Italy, would be a wall instead of a bridge in her relations with the Balkans.

The Foreign Minister declared that Russia had neither a moral nor a political interest in the Adriatic, and he said that with Venice, Pola, Avlona and Otranto in the hands of Italy, the Adriatic might become another closed sea. Continuing, Sazonoff said:

"We already have two closed seas, the Baltic and the Black Sea. We do not want a third. If it were the Atlantic, then that would be different, but with the Adriatic we have nothing to do. The Black Sea is a Russian Sea. Russia cannot permit barbarian Turkey to possess the key to this sea. The commercial life of Russia already has suffered by the closing of the Dardanelles, which must end.

"Bulgaria and Rumania have nothing to fear because all would have equal commercial rights through the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles, which in the hands of Russia would guarantee order and safety of navigation.

BALKAN STATES ARE SOUNDED BY AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

Conversations Expected Soon to Develop Plans of Rumania and Bulgaria.

By Karl H. von Wiegand,

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch and the New York World.

VIENNA, May 28, (via The Hague), May 29.—With Italy's declaration of war against her ally having brought to a close the game of diplomacy wherein the allies held the winning cards, all eyes in Vienna, Budapest, Berlin and Constantinople are now being directed upon the Balkans.

From what I have learned in Budapest and here, it is evident that important developments in the Balkans may be expected in the near future. I am enabled to say that conversations have been begun with Bucharest and Sofia which should soon develop what Rumania and Bulgaria purpose doing if they abandon neutrality.

Immediately after Italy's declaration of war, considerable nervousness was manifested in Vienna and Budapest about Rumania. Quieting reports have come from Bucharest which indicate no unusual activity there. Count Tisza had a long audience with the aged Emperor Francis Joseph on Thursday. Tisza is the one big figure in the dual monarchy in whose statesmanship Hungarians express implicit confidence.

I was reliably informed in Budapest that Tisza had taken over the direction of the Balkan negotiations as far as Austria-Hungary is concerned.

Diplomatic Changes in Bulgaria Considered to Be Significant.

PARIS, May 29.—Important changes in the Bulgarian diplomatic service just announced are considered here to be highly significant. The Matin sees in them an indication that Bulgaria will be the second neutral to join the allies. D. Bizow, Minister to Italy and a firm supporter of the Triple Alliance, has been replaced at Rome by M. Stancioff, diplomatic agent in Paris, who will, in turn, be succeeded by M. Grecow, confidential secretary of King Ferdinand.

DIVER FINDS NO BODIES IN FORWARD HOLD OF THE F4

Further Search of Interior Halted by Order to Bring Submarine Into Harbor.

HONOLULU, T. H., May 29.—No bodies of officers and crew of the United States submarine F4 were found in the forward hold of the vessel when a diver entered it yesterday, according to an announcement by Rear-Admiral E. T. Moore today.

The statement said the diver was unable to enter the middle hold.

Exploration of the interior was halted by orders from the Navy Department to bring the vessel into harbor for examination to determine the cause of the sinking on March 25.

After search had been halted, the work of lifting her closer to the surface was resumed. New hoisting lines were dragged under the craft by divers. The latest estimate was that it would be several days before the F4 could be brought inside in the harbor and raised to the surface.

TEXT OF VANDERBILT WILL DISPOSING OF ESTATE ESTIMATED AT $30,000,000

executors that this sum was in addition to a liberal settlement made for the son by the father in his lifetime.

Frederick M. Davis, who is dead, was a close personal friend of Vanderbilt. Henry B. Anderson was his personal attorney, and the will was drawn in his office. Frederick L. Merriam was a close business associate and business agent for Mr. Vanderbilt, looking largely after his investments and the general handling of the estate. All three were named as executors. C. E. Croker was Vanderbilt's private secretary.

1. I direct the executors of this, my will, hereinafter named, to pay out of m yestate all my funeral and testamentary expenses and all my just debts as soon after my decease as may be convenient.

Also I give and bequeath to my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, the further sum of one million dollars ($1,000,000) in cash, or, in the discretion of the executors of this my will, in securities to be selected by them from the personal property which I may own at the time of my decease, of the then market value of one million dollars ($1,000,000), as and for her absolute property.

I give and bequeath to my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, my houseboat, Venture.

3. I give, devise and bequeath to my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, my real estate known as Sagamore Lodge, comprising about fifteen hundred and twenty-six (1526) acres and my real estate known as Camp Kill-Kare, comprising about ten hundred and thirty (1030) acres, and my real estate known as Moose River Tract, comprising about two thousand (2000) acres and all my other real estate in the County of Hamilton, in the State of New York, together with all personal property therein or thereon or used in connection therewith or appurtenant thereto, and all my lands, tenements and hereditaments situated in England and my leasehold of an apartment in the property known as Gloucester House, at Piccadilly and Park Lane, in London, England, together with all personal property therein or thereon or used in connection therewith or appurtenant thereto, excepting only moneys, stocks, bonds or other securities.

4. I give and bequeath to the executors of this my will the sum of five million dollars ($5,000,000) in cash, or in the discretion of my said executors, in securities to be selected by them from the personal property which I may own at the time of my decease, of the then market value of five million dollars ($5,000,000) in trust, nevertheless, to hold, or, in their discretion, to sell the same and to invest and reinvest the proceeds thereof as hereinafter provided; to collect and receive the income and profits from and of the principal thereof, and, after paying therefrom all proper expenses of the administration of said trust and all taxes of any kind properly payable upon or in respect to said trust fund or the income therefrom to pay the balance of said income to my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, quarterly, for and during the term of her natural life; and upon her death, if any provided issue of us shall survive her, to pay over, assign, transfer and deliver the principal of said trust to and among such issue in such shares and proportions as she shall by her last will and testament direct and appoint, or, in default of such appointment, to and among our issue, in equal shares, per stirpes and not per capita.

Son Gets Trust Fund.

5. I give and bequeath to each and every child that shall be born to me hereafter, either in my lifetime or after my death, lawful issue of me, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000).

6. Exercising the power of appointment given to me by the eleventh article of the will of my father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, I direct that the trust found which is now held in trust for me under the provisions of said article of said will be paid over, assigned, transferred and delivered to my son, William H. Vanderbilt.

7. I give and bequeath to my son, William H. Vanderbilt, my coach known as "Venture."

I give and bequeath to my son, William H. Vanderbilt, the portraits and bust bequeathed to me by the first article of the will of my father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, and the gold medal voted by the Congress of the United States to my great-grandfather, Cornelius Vanderbilt, at the close of the War of the Rebellion in 1865, and which medal was bequeathed to me by the sixteenth article of the will of my father. If my said son shall not survive me, then I give and bequeath said portraits and said bust and said gold medal to my brother, Cornelius Vanderbilt.

8. I give, devise and bequeath all my real estate known as "Oakland Farm," at Portsmouth, R. I., and all the livestock and other personal property thereon or used in connection therewith, or appurtenant thereto, to the executors of this my will, in trust, nevertheless, to hold and to manage and to maintain the said property for the use of my son, William H. Vanderbilt, and to permit him to occupy said farm as a place of residence and to use said personal property during his minority in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may seem advisable to them and, when he attains the age of 22 years, to convey, transfer, assign and deliver to him all the said real estate and so much of the said personal property as they shall not previously have sold or otherwise disposed of under the power hereinafter given to them, and if my said son dies before attaining the age of 21 years, then upon his death to convey, transfer, assign and deliver said real estate and said personal property to my oldest surviving son, if any, and if no son of mine be then living, to convey, transfer, assign and deliver all said property to and make the same a part of my residuary estate.

Provision for Possible Daughter.

9. If I leave surviving me daughters of a daughter, issue of my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, and myself, then in that event I give and bequeath to my said executors cash, or, in their descretion, securities to be selected by them from the personal property which I may own at the time of my decease sufficient for the purpose, to hold two million dollars ($2,000,000) in cash, or in their discretion, securities of the then market value of two million dollars ($2,000,000) in trust, nevertheless for each such surviving daughters; to invest and reinvest the same as hereinafter provided to collect and receive the income and profits thereof and, after paying all proper expenses of the administration of said trust and all taxes of any kind properly payable upon or in respect to said trust fund or the income therefrom, to apply so much of the balance of said income as in the judgment of said trustees may be necessary to the support, maintenance and education of said daughter for whom said principal is so held in trust, during her minority, accumulating meantime any surplus income when she shall attain the age of twenty-one years to pay over to her all accumulations of said income; thereafter to pay over to her the entire balance of said income quarterly during her life; and upon her death to convey, assign, transfer and pay over said principal of said trust to her surviving issue in such shares and proportions as she shall by last will and testament appoint, and in default of such appointment, in equal shares, and in default of such surviving issue, then in equal shares to her full brothers and full sisters and the issue of any of them that may be then deceased, in equal shares, per stirpes and not per capita.

10. If I leave surviving me issue of a deceased son or of a deceased daughter of my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt, and myself, then and in that event I give and bequeath to such issue two million dollars ($2,000,000) in equal shares, per stripes and not per capita.

11. I give and bequeath to my brother, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000); to my uncle, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000); to Frederick M. Davies five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000); to Henry B. Anderson two hundred thousand dollars ($200,00); to Frederick L. Merriam two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($250,000); to Charles E. Crocker ten thousand dollars ($10,000), and to Howard Lockwood one thousand dollars ($1000).

I give and bequeath to each of those persons who may be in my employ at my farm known as "Oakland Farm" at Plymouth, Rhode Island, or on my properties known as "Sagamore Lodge," "Camp Kill-Kare" or "Moose River Tract," or any of my other property in Hamilton County, New York, or in my stable or garage in the City of New York, or in my apartment in Gloucester House in London, England, at the time of my decease, and who at that time shall have been in my employ for a period of five years consecutively, an amount equivalent to his or her wages for the last year of such period.

Executors to Divide Estate.

12. All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real, personal and mixed (hereinafter referred to as "residuary estate",) wheresoever the same may be situated, I give, devise and bequeath to the executors of this my will, to divide the same into as many equal shares as I shall leave said issue of my said wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt and myself, surviving me, and to hold one of such shares, in trust, nevertheless, for each of our said sons; to invest and reinvest the same as hereinafter provided; to collect and receive the income and profits from and of the principal thereof, and, after paying therefrom all proper expenses of the administration of said trust and all taxes of any kind properly payable upon or in respect to said trust fund or the income therefrom, to apply or pay over the balance of said income, hereinafter referred to as "net income" and to convey, assign, transfer and pay over said principal for the benefit of and to the use of said son for whom said share is so held in trust.

The will then provides that this share is to pay for the son's maintenance and education during minority; to pay him when 21 years old all accumulation of income and one-quarter of principal; thereafter to pay him net income of remainder until 25 years of age, when another quarter of principal is to be paid him; to pay another quarter at 30 years of age and the balance at 35.

Should only one son by the second wife survive, then all the residuary estate goes to him. Like provision was made should there be daughters instead of sons surviving.

The balance of the will provides for the routine carrying out of previous provisions, closing with the naming of "my brother, Reginald C. Vanderbilt; my uncle, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Henry B. Anderson, Frederick M. Davies and Frederick L. Merriam, executors of this, my will, and trustees of the several trusts created by this, my will."

No bond is to be required of the executor and trustees, who are to serve without compensation other than the bequests made.

The men pushed and grabbed her, she said, and snatched jewelry from her. One of them snatched her mesh bag and, after taking her money, threw the bag at her. WIFE AND FORMER WIFE OF "COUNT" EACH CLAIM $2600

Mrs. Irene Leschinsky Takes Step to Recover Part of $35,000 She Gave to Husband.

Mrs. Irene Sanford Leschinsky of 4213 West Pine boulevard took the first step yesterday in her efforts to recover some of the $35,000 which she had, from time to time within the last year, given to Judah Leon Leschinsky, the self-styled "Count" who last Monday sued to divorce her after five months of turbulent married life.

She figures in a suit to determine the ownership of $2600, which is also being claimed by the "Count's" first wife, Sonia Mae Leschinsky of 4333 Maryland avenue, who divorced him Nov. 4 last, six weeks before his marriage to the Baroness Irene von Schrader. Her attorney, Louis Mayer, also announced that other suits would be filed this week.

The suit was filed by Henry S. Caulfield, trustee, who holds the $2600, which is the proceeds of the satisfaction of some notes secured by an apartment house at Hamilton and Julian avenues. He was so puzzled by the rival claims of the two Mrs. Leschinsky that he refused to give it to either, but asked the Circuit Court to have the question adjudicated.

The money in dispute was paid to Caulfield by the Pendleton Investment Co. to redeem title to the apartment house property, which was sold recently under foreclosure on certain notes held by Leschinsky. Mrs. Sonia Leschinsky bid the property in at $2600 because she held notes against it.

The present Mrs. Leschinsky alleges that her husband gave these notes to his former wife in settlement of alimony and that they, as well as those which he still holds, were purchased with her money. His transaction in connection with the notes, she declares, was as her agent only, and she asserts that she has now revoked his power of acting as her agent.

The 14 original notes for $444 each were given against the property July 21, 1914, by the Pendleton Investment Co. Four of them have been paid, but default was made on four others April 26.

Suit was filed against Leschinsky yesterday by Harry Turner, president of the Mississippi Valley Auto Co., 5023 Delmar boulevard, for $62 for garage services charged against the automobile which the second Mrs. Leschinsky replevined from the "count" last Monday. The bill, he said, had been due since Dec. 1, prior to the "count's" second marriage.

ITALY ESTABLISHES STRICT RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS

War Episodes Cannot Be Sent Out Until 10 Days After They Take Place.

ITALIAN FRONTIER, May 29.—Italy thus far has been more rigorous than any other country at war concerning provision for the newspapers obtaining news of the progress of the war. No permission has been given journalists to proceed to the front. Strict prohibition, carrying with it severe penalties, has been issued against any message regarding the military operations being sent by correspondents, which must be cial communications, which must be used in full and not be quoted in part.

Descriptions even of the most trivial episodes of the war will only be permitted to be sent out of Italy 10 days after their occurrence. Therefore the only means the correspondents have for communicating with points outside the kingdom is to travel to the frontier and file their dispatches. The authorities are even endeavoring to prevent this mode of communication.

CHICAGO-TO-GULF BOAT STARTS

CHICAGO, May 29.—The first Chicago-to-the-Gulf steamer started on its voyage today from La Salle, to which city her cargo was brought on steam barges from Chicago. The boat is of the Mississippi River type and, it is said, will be regularly followed by others.

A formal demonstration by committees from cities along the route marked the occasion.

WOMAN SAYS SHE WAS DECEIVED INTO PAYING SON'S BILLS

Mother Sues Estate of the Late Guy K. Fisher, Jeweler, for $4232.

A suit filed yesterday by Mrs. Jane M. Fisher of 3518 Shenandoah avenue, a widow, disclosed that she supported her son, the late Guy K. Fisher, a St. Louis jeweler who left an estate valued at more than $100,000, during his lifetime. She was led to believe, she alleges, that he was unable, financially, to take care of himself. Mrs. Fisher's suit against her son's estate is for $4232, which she alleges he cost her in board, care and doctor's bills.

Fisher was 40 years old, and not until after his death, his mother asserts, did she learn that he was married. He died Jan. 29 last and when his will was filed, a few days later, it was found that he had left a widow and that she was made beneficiary in the will. An inventory of the estate, filed later, disclosed that Fisher's holdings were valued at $101,128.67.

Secretly Married His Clerk.

In a suit brought in the Madison County Probate Court at Edwardsville a few weeks ago, over a part of the estate, the jeweler's widow appeared and told for the first time the story of her elopement and marriage to Fisher.

She said that she and Fisher eloped to Michigan, Aug. 26, 1912, and were married. She was a clerk in his jewelry store in the Victoria Building in St. Louis. They never announced that they had been married, she testified. The widow is now conducting the business she inherited from Fisher.

Previous to her marriage, Mrs. Fisher was Miss Amelia Bronenkamp, a daughter of Mrs. Mary Bronenkamp. She is living at her mother's home at 3955 Magnolia avenue.

Paid Railroad Fare of "Clerk".

When Fisher was attacked by tuberculosis in 1914, his mother says, she paid his railroad fare to Charlevoix, Mich., as well as that of his present widow, who was then known to the mother, she alleges, only as her son's clerk, and who went with him as a sort of nurse.

An item for $137.50 for two months' board for the two during their stay in Michigan is included among the items. Bills for various amounts paid to physicians and nurses as well as hospitals appear in the list.

In the petition filed in behalf of Mrs. Fisher, her son's will is referred to as the "supposed will." Robert M. Nichols, attorney for the mother, declined to explain what might be meant by the use of the words.

DEATH RATE AFTER 40 HIGHER; GOVERNMENT SAYS WALK, WALK

WASHINGTON, May 29. — The United States Public Health Service has issued this warning to the public:

"The death rate after the age of 40 is increasing, in spite of more sanitary modes of living and greater protection against communicable disease. The expectation of life after 40 is less than it was 30 years ago. This is due largely to increased prevalence of the diseases of degeneration.

"The muscles, arteries and other organs of those who, as a result of sedentary occupation or indulgence, take too little exercise, degenerate. Heart disease, kidney disease and other ills follow.

"Take exercise. Take daily exercise. Have a hobby that gets you out of doors. Walk to your business, to your dressmakers. Walk for the sake of walking. Join a walking club and keep your weekly scores of miles. Keep chickens; make a garden; wheel the baby, or play golf or any other game, but take two hours' outdoor exercise every day.

"Gymnasium work is good for those who like it and can afford it, but avoid heavy athletics. Don't try to be a 'strong man.' The champion athletes die young. Be a moderate, persistent, daily exponent of exercise.

"You may not burn the family carriage, as Benjamin Franklin suggested, but at least, as he advised, walk, walk, walk."

COURT RESTRAINS 2-CENT RAILROAD RATE IN ARKANSAS

Hearing in Case Between Carriers and State to Come Up in St. Louis Dec. 11.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 29.—Temporary injunctions restraining the Arkansas Railway Commission from putting into effect its new 2-cents-a-mile passenger rate on all roads over 85 miles long and 3 cents a mile on railroads under that length, were granted today in United States District Court to the St. Louis Southwestern Railway, the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Pine Bluff, Arkansas River Railway and the Warren & Ouachita Valley Railway companies.

The restraining orders already granted in the United State District Court to the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co., and to the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., against the enforcement of new freight rates by the Arkansas Railroad Commission were continued in force by order of the three Judges until Dec. 11.

The action of the court today means as soon as bonds to protect the State of Arkansas are filed and approved by the Court, four of the railways will be permitted to put into force a 3-cent passenger rate and the Warren & Ouachita Valley Railway Co. may put into effect a 5-cent passenger rate. These rates will be in force till the final settlement of the case between the State and the railways, which will be heard in St. Louis, Dec. 11, that date having been set by the Court today.

The Court fixed the bonds of the railway cases to cover the excess of the 3-cent rate over the 2-cent rate as follows: St. Louis Southwestern, $30,000; St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern, $50,000; Rock Island, $30,000; Pine Bluff, Arkansas River Co., $5000. The bond in the case of the Warren & Ouchita Valley company, to cover the excess between 3-cent a mile rate and the 5-cent passenger rate, was set at $3000.

DRUGGIST'S TRAP FOR THIEF RESULTS IN MAN'S ARREST

Proprietor, Who Missed Articles, Watched Store From Improvised Observation Tower.

The arrest of George Alderson, 27 years old, a railroad employe, residing at the Marlowe Hotel, has disclosed a unique trap set by R. H. Krammenacher, proprietor of the Linmar Pharmacy at Vandeventer and Washington avenues, to capture the party he thought responsible for the disappearance of toilet accessories from his counters in the last three months.

When safety razors, face cream, perfumed soap and the like continued to disappear with monotonous regularity, Krammenacher suspected Alderson, who lived across the street, and who visited the pharmacy every morning for a chat.

The druggist placed three large cardboard display signs upright on the roof of the storm door entrance, and took turns with two clerks in hiding behind this for a few hours each morning.

Friday morning, the fifth day of the vigil, Krummenacher was doing "detective duty" in the improvised observation tower when he saw Alderson approaching. He called to Dr. Don D. Numbers and Murray Winn, his assistants, to go down into the cellar. Krummenacher, as part of the trap, had connected the cellar and the observatory with an electric push-button. Three rings was the signal for the clerks to rush upstairs.

Alderson entered the store. When Krummenacher saw him leaning over the counter, he pushed the button. The clerks came up from the cellar, and started to seize Alderson, the only other man in the store. Alderson resisted at first, and then seeing Krummenacher peering over the signs, desisted.

The police reported that the druggist, on searching Alderson, found a 50-cent box of face powder, a 25-cent cake of perfumed soap, and two 35-cent nail files, which the druggist identified as his property.

Alderson was taken to the Laclede avenue police station, where he gave bond to answer a petit larceny charge. He was not at the hotel last night when a Post-Dispatch reporter called for a statement.

PRESIDENT WILL KEEP MEXICAN PLANS A SECRET

Expected to Make Clear to Warring Leaders That Hostilities Must End.

NEW APPEAL FOR FOOD

Red Cross Sends Messages to Governors Asking Aid for People.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Announcement that President Wilson would demand a settlement of the Mexican problem by the warring factions themselves within a short time and failing that, adopt some means not defined as yet to bring about peace, has developed acute interest in official and diplomatic quarters as to the prospective action of the United States.

The President's appeal for funds and supplies to relieve the starving population of Mexico, the preparation at the White House of a statement to be communicated to all military leaders in Mexico next Tuesday and arrangements of the American Red Cross for a huge relief scheme are the first steps in a policy which, it became known today, President Wilson has had under consideration, with the object of restoring peace in Mexico.

The text of the President's forthcoming statement is an official secret, but from those who advised with him prior to its preparation, it is understood Mr. Wilson will address not only the military leaders in Mexico, but the Mexican people and at the same time the people of the United States. He will review in detail the course of the events in Mexico since the assassination of Madero and Suarez and the usurpation of the presidency by Huerta.

Constitutionalists Have Failed.

The pronouncement, it is said, will call attention to the fact that the United States Government, by refusing to recognize Huerta, assisted in driving him out of power and expected from the victorious Constitutionalists the re-establishment of government in Mexico. Nearly a year has passed since Huerta was compelled to resign, but the Constitutionalists, the statement will say, have failed in the meantime to restore order, conditions growing worse daily, with no faction apparently possessing the capacity to establish a government.

In view of these conditions, according to reliable information, the statement will serve notice that as the situation has grown intolerable to foreigners and the Mexican people alike, the Mexican chiefs must arrange for an early solution of the problem. Unless this is forthcoming soon, it will be indicated to the military leaders in Mexico that some other means may have to be employed to assist the Mexican people. The President does not intended to specify this Government's course for the present.

Officials did not deny today that if the Mexican factions failed to compose the situation there was a possibility of intervention by the United States.

Might Ask Intervention.

It was previously pointed out, however, that what might have been considered by some Mexicans as an aggressive intervention would now be considered, on account of the famine conditions, as a humanitarian expedition designed to save the Mexican people, helpless in the hands of military bands. It is even suggested in well-informed quarters that one result of the food situation, if famine continues, would be a direct appeal to the United States Government from large numbers of the Mexican people for intervention.

The new phases in the Washington Government's policy may take several weeks to develop. For the present efforts will be made to get food to the Mexicans. The seizure by the Carranza authorities of 600 tons of corn purchased by the International Relief Committee is one of the incidents which has aggravated the situation considerably, and it is expected notice will be served on the Mexican Generals to permit the transportation of relief supplies or the American Government may be constrained to undertake the distribution of supplies through its own agencies.

Many Conferences Held.

The plan of President Wilson has been evolved after many conferences with Cabinet officers and others. The report of Duval West, who returned last Tuesday after an investigation of the economic and political situation in Mexico, confirmed the impressions of the President that none of the factions seemed able to control the military situation and that famine was threatening in many parts of the republic. The President is said to be hopeful that the effect of his statement will be to draw the better elements of the Mexican military factions together into some conservative plan for the establishment of a government that could be accorded recognition by the United States.

Eliseo Arredondo, head of the Carranza Agency here, issured a statement tonight declaring every facility would be afforded by Gen. Carranza to carry on relief work and that President Wilson's appeal was deeply appreciated. Gen. Carranza was held in the statement to be innocent of any "charge of neglect or indifference in connection with the unfortunate food situation and it will be remembered that no such distress exists anywhere in Mexico where the Constitutionalists Government is in control."

The statement announced further that Carranza forces under Gen. Pablo Gonzales were moving toward Mexico City, to take the capital and relieve distress there. In the meantime, Mr. Arredondo adds, no one "will expect Mr. Carranza to ship from the peaceful territory under his control the food necessary for the inhabitants of Mexico City to feed the bandits who are responsible for the present situation."

Original Poetry Lost in Hum of Voices at State Meeting of Women's Clubs; Fashion Show Proved to Be Rival Attraction

Sound of 600 Delegates Talking at Once Impressed Marguerite Martyn

Proceedings, However, Were Without Hitch and President Never Lost Poise.

WHAT REPORTS SHOWED

Clubs Have Accomplished Many Reforms and Have Made Start on Others.

By Marguerite Martyn.

WHAT impression does the non-participating observer bring away from a State convention of women's clubs?

I could play it for you on the piano better than I can describe or draw a picture of it.

Not an unmelodious nor inharmonious medley of sound, nevertheless, all sound, that's the impression that fairly submerged in memory everything that happened in St. Joseph during the three days' session of the Missouri Federation Biennial just concluded. The range, the sustaining quality, the endurance of that "excellent thing in woman," a soft voice, was not the only thing one learned from so great a body of learned ladies, of course, but it was the great enveloping and consuming impression until I got out of range of those voices. Being accustomed to the industrious hum of machinery, big cylinder presses, typewriters and other noisesome instruments and having attended several national political conventions was no preparatory training I found, for the buzz and hubbub emanating from the throats of 600 women when they all talked at once.

SKETCHED IN ST. JOSEPH BY Marguerite Martyn

Schedule Kept to Letter.

It was not surprising to find that the meetings were conducted with greater expedition, order and regard for parliamentary law than most meetings do. It was not surprising, too, that women's speeches were more carefully prepared, more telling in dramatic and elocutionary effect, and delivered with greater economy of time than those of the men on the program. None of the men had ever got under way where the ten minute time limit was imposed and the gavel descended, while the women were able to reel off volumes in that length of time.

The great wonder is only that the program was carried off almost to the letter of the printed word, while for the most part, the audience just kept right on talking, chatting concertedly and unremittingly. The still greater wonder is that the poise of the presiding officer never was for an instant shaken. Her sweetness and tact and that radiant all pervading smile of hers were unfailing through it all. She used the gavel freely and would rise toweringly to her feet as with her great height and imposing presence she is able to do, and she would demand order in her own far-reaching voice and she might succeed in effecting a barely perceptible lull. But she drove that program through, nevertheless, undeviatingly and without a hitch.

What a pity that such executive ability as Mrs. Chivvis' is not utilized at the seat of real government instead of at this initiative performance!

And there were several of her contemporaries in executive ability, forme State presidents, among the audience.

Notable Clubwomen There.

There was Mrs. E. M. Shepherd of Springfield, whose resolute manner and forceful utterances when she got upon her feet with something to say, were not to be distracted by any amount of frivolous chatter going on all about her.

There was dainty, fragile Mrs. W. K. James of St. Joseph, whose force of personality seems to be in her very gentleness. One grew to expect that when she arose she would have something effective to say and always her clear, ringing voice would compel a momentary silence, reminding me, somehow, of a church bell pealing forth Sunday morning in the country. She urged always the need of the State endowment fund and finally induced the convention to incorporate the Federation under the laws of Missouri. In impassioned tones, in one instance, she made this characteristic epigram:

"We learn to love our State as you only learn to love the thing you work and sacrifice for!"

Then there was Mrs. Henry N. Ess, of whom it was said "she could be State president any time she wanted to." Seasoned campaigner and politician, fluent and picturesque in speech, so easily mistress of any situation that arose, I couldn't help thinking how well she might fill the place of certain Speakers of the House of Representatives we have had—and a much gamer and sportsmanlike loser than some of them. Through an intricate process of amending a bylaw, Mrs. Ess was deposed from the exclusive control of the scholarship loan fund, which for years she administered faithfully, wisely and well. It was proposed that two new directors be elected and share responsibility. When it came to a division Mrs. Ess must have observed regretfully that the women were following each other like sheep, but she simply arose and cast her vote with the majority.

Mrs. Moore Still a Leader.

Then there was Mrs. Philip N. Moore, most forceful and compelling personality of them all, retaining in retirement the influence that was hers when she was National Federation president. Always conservative, even in these days of the new freedom, new patriotism and new democracy, she remains in the vanguard of leadership. The evolution of the club woman was interesting as traced by her through successive slogans she has seen adopted.

"First it was 'culture,'" she said. "Next 'service' was the popular catch word with us. 'Conservation' had its day. The popularity of the word 'efficiency' is waning and 'citizenship' becomes the next slogan."

Suffragists present were encouraged to believe that Mrs. Moore's long-hoped-for capitulation to their cause, with her vast influence, was at hand. But afterward, when I asked her if she had at last come over, she would say, as usual:

"I know suffrage is coming. I only hope women will be ready for it when it comes." She would not admit she thought all women were ready for citizenship now. But then she always has held that all men are not prepared for citizenship, either.

From the frequent reiteration of "cooperation," it seems to me this convention developed in this word another slogan for present use.

Then there was Mrs. Utter whose personality triumphed whenever she chose to command attention. She gave further convincing evidence of executive and organizing ability when, as president of the Woman's Council, she made a record-breaking report of a gain of some 4000 members in that club since its inception little more than a year ago. As president of the largest club in the largest city, she would seem to loom upon the horizon of future presidential possibilities when St. Louis' turn for the office rolls around again.

Yes, if talk were all that were necessary for the solution of all the problems that beset Missouri, the State might resign itself like an irresponsible child, safe from all harm, to the keeping and watchful, motherly care of this body of women. Just a few of the problems the M. F. W. C. undertook and disposed of in words, gleaned from the papers, speeches and discussions, follow:

Equal suffrage and prohibition, reported favorably; the problems of good roads, of the unemployed, of a State reservation and the conservation of Ha Ha Tonka park, of tree planting on the Santa Fe trail, of expert supervision of the State Penitentiary, divorcing wardenship from politics; the problems of a national anthem, of universal peace, of child labor, of more restrictions governing the working age permit; the movement to make parents who contribute to delinquency of their children guilty of felony instead of misdemeanor; better humane laws and the movement in favor of mothers feeding their babies in the natural instead of artificial way.

This last idea was launched by a suffragist, Mrs. E. M. Platt of St. Joseph. Mothers' pensions were discussed and advocated; women on school boards and the teaching of domestic science in the public schools were officially advocated, and last but not least in interest among the women, the problem of dress reformation was taken up.

How far the women's clubs are able to go in the accomplishment of reform is best proved by results as set forth in the delegates' reports covering the activities of various clubs in various sections of the State during the last two years.

Investigations of dance halls, moving picture shows and industrial conditions, appeared in several reports. One hundred and twenty-five unemployed were fed daily in Kansas City. Questionable advertisements were investigated. Outdoor camps for babies were established. Jail inmates were ministered to. Police women were installed. Club houses were built, railroad stations and cemeteries were beautified, prizes were offered for bird houses by one club. Clean-up and paint-up campaigns were prosecuted. What was known as the North End in Kansa City was eradicated, and with the moral clean-up even the stigma of the name was removed, and now the locality is known as the North Side. A lunch room for girls and men was established in an industrial neighborhood of Kansas City and provided needed moral tone and increased business efficiency. Scholarships were awarded and a great deal of charity dispensed in a variety of ways.

As already asserted, these notations were gathered in spite of the hum of conversation accompanying each reading of a report. That many interesting achievements were lost to this degree of fame because the delegate had not enough voice or aggressiveness to make herself heard, there can be no doubt. I never should have learned of how a club at De Soto caused to be prosecuted, convicted and committed to prison for two years a public official guilty of misconduct if chance hadn't thrown Mrs. Dewey, the president of that club, into the same quiet corner where I had sought refuge.

"The men thought to wear us out with that trial," she told me. "They caused it to be held 20 miles away and postponed it day after day for three weeks. But every day we drove that 20 miles and didn't give up until we had convinced him."

Much Original Poetry Lost.

How much original poetry fell upon unhearing ears is another conjecture. Several women made their reports in verse. Mrs. Emile Paillou of St. Louis and Mrs. Jonathan Hawley of Chillicothe, were two whose rhymes compelled a brief quiet. Mrs. Frank S. Leach of Sedalia, in a black jet gown, illustrating her subject, "Civic Responsibility," with an American Beauty rose, and waving a small silk flag, produced as if by magic with a great deal of elocutionary gesture, made herself observed if not listened to. The report of Mrs. Eugenia Rutherford, composed in the old, old style of the scriptures, stood out in contrast to flowery and scholarly effusion that had gone before.

When she began "And it came to pass in the second year of the reign of Ada of the house of Chivvis," the audience perceived a real novelty and kept so interested that when her 10 minutes were up bedlam reigned and Madame President, at their vociferous demand, was induced to break the rule and let this delegate complete her paper.

"And behold, this club removed from the city much dirt and added to it much paint, and did feel the call for assistance from the jail, and they did what was good in their sight, and books were sent, that the evildoers might be enlightened."

And it came to pass that a town library was accumulated and "the club did pay, and is even now paying, a librarian." Wherefore it was borne in upon them that surely they needed a building, the erection of which "might be brought about by one Andrew, whose surname is Carnegie. And it was even so."

Further along in the scriptural narrative it developed that "Amelia of the house of Wight did cause to be sent many epistles unto those seated in the house of the mighty," praying that temperance, even prohibition, might prevail long enough that "the wets might be kept at their own fireside until they dried out."

Fashion Show a Rival.

One afternoon, it wasn't conversation, but the announcement of a fashion show across the street that all but disorganized the convention.

Now, in the beginning, the president, in an outspoken plea for simple dressing, had taken pains to forestall this very distraction of fine raiment.

Instead of having the desired effect such a request was revolutionary enough to furnish campaign material to an incipient opposition party in Kansas City with a candidate, the present vice president, Miss Marie L. Goodman, whom they hoped to thrust into any little breach in Mrs. Chivvis' popularity.

It is well known by this time that the Kansas City uprising did not amount to anything—how the 300 rooters who had planned to stampede the convention with the added force of perfectly irresistable gowns and hats, was frustrated by so providential an interference as the weather.

The plain clothes injunction remained a "wet blanket" only while the continuous rain of the first day enforced the order for leaving elaborate costumes hanging in the closet.

The night of the banquet at the Robidoux, divided between loyalty to the president's wishes and the desire to appear in evening dress, an opportunity as rare as biennials with some of us, there were not a few who looked rather guilty, confident of how gorgeously arrayed they were in the latest triumphs of the leading dressmakers back home. When, lo and behold, Mrs. Chivvis herself appeared in a gown of chiffon, lace, sequins, maline and chiffon cloth and many sparkling jewels!

Everybody Was Relieved.

"If that's what Mrs. Chivvis calls a plain gown, well"—— the unanimous exclamation ended in a deep breath of relief.

But to return to the fashion show. Mrs. Chivvis had been foresighted enough in sanctioning its place on the program to make sure it aided her pet reform. Hugh Fullerton of Cleveland, now, but the same who did sociological work here, is engaged in a movement to standardize woman's dress. His altruistic purposes this time are several fold, one being to provide garment workers with steady employment, which they can't have, so long as manufacturers must sit idle, with ears to the ground, each season until Paris has declared what's what. Another object is to provide the sensible woman, who wants a rational suit that can be worn several seasons without going out of style, with the opportunity of expressing this desire. His fashion show was to demonstrate his idea. But the very word fashion was enough when the appointed hour rolled around to cause women to drop all pretense of interest in the serious problems and papers on hand. Mrs. Chivvis had to order the doors closed and guarded and all but came down and laid hands on the audience, to keep it from deserting.

WIFE, HUSBAND SAID HAD NEGRO BLOOD, SETTLES SUIT

Mrs. Little Gets $20 and He Obtains Divorce on Cruelty Charge.

DETROIT, Mich., May 29.—After announcing that he was prepared to prove that his wife had negro blood in her veins, Charles A. Little effected settlement with her for $20, and the wife withdrew her suit for a divorce. Yesterday the husband appeared in Judge Hally's court and obtained a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty.

In the bill which Mrs. Little filed and later withdrew, it was alleged that her husband's father, who lived with them, was the cause of most of the trouble.

Testifying for his son, yesterday, the father emphatically stated that the young couple could not live together again, because, he said, Mrs Little was low-born and always cultivated low people.

HUERTA OPPOSES INVASION, 'EVEN IN FRIENDLY SPIRIT'

Mexican Question Must Be Settled by Mexicans, He Declares.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Gen. Victoriano Huerta was outspoken today in condemning interference by the United States in Mexico. He gave the following interview and after reading it as the reporter wrote it, the General signed it:

"Of course, the situation in Mexico is very grave. The conditions there are a very great deal worse than the newspapers in the United States report. You feel it as for humanity's sake; I feel it as a son of my country.

"But I must say again that the Mexican question must and will be settled by the Mexicans exclusively. No intervention in any way, shape or manner. We Mexicans will not stand for it.

"No matter how the intervention is—even if it be in the most friendly spirit—it will be looked upon by our whole nation as a stranger's meddling in a family trouble.

"There is no such thing as friendly intervention. Intervention, no matter in what shape it may be phrased, will be the greatest blunder yet. It may take 1000 men to start friendly intervention, but this will end with hundreds of thousands of men and unfriendly intervention."

FIVE MEXICANS RESENTENCED

Arizona Legislature Not to Take Up Capital Punishment Question.

PHOENIX, Ariz., May 29.—Capital punishment will not be legislated upon at a special session of the Arizona Legislature soon to be called, it was learned today.

"It would do no good," said Gov. George Hunt today, in explaining why the subject is not to be included in his call for the session. Land legislation and measures for enforcement of prohibition probably will be the only recommendations, although the five Mexicans reprieved yesterday from death were resentenced by Gov. Hunt to die July 30. This is the extreme time allowed by the reprieve recommended by the State Board of Pardons and Paroles. The board's recommendations that the executions be conducted one at a time was disregarded. Organization of a State society in favor of capital punishment was begun here today.

SEEKS INQUIRY IN HUSBAND'S DEATH AFTER HIS ARREST

Jitney Driver's Widow Says She Believes He Was Injured by Kick by Patrolman.

Policeman Denies That He Struck George J. Moore in Encounter on April 23.

Mrs. George J. Moore of 3209A Olive street, yesterday announced she would ask an investigation into the death of her husband at the City Hospital Friday afternoon. She declared she believed that he died from injuries resulting from a kick which she says was administered April 23 by Patrolman Charles Duncan in an argument about a tail light on a jitney automobile which her husband operated in partnership with Isia Schwartz of 2918 Washington avenue.

Duncan is attached to the Page Boulevard Station. It was said there last night that no complaint had been lodged against him. He was not at his home, 1562 South Vandeventer avenue, when a reporter called there for a statement.

Says She Has Witnesses.

Mrs. Moore, in investigating her husband's death, said she had learned from his partner and from witnesses that he was beaten without provocation.

Louis Blumenfeld of 1609A Carr street, a salesman, who was a passenger in Moore's jitney car, told a reporter yesterday that Moore, on the night of the encounter with the police, had stopped the auto in front of 5087 Delmar bboulevard when the tail light went out.

While Moore was trying to relight it, Blumenfeld said, the policeman approached and ordered him to hurry. The wind blew out several matches while Moore was trying to relight the lamp, and then, Blumenfeld said, the policeman declared he would arrest Moore.

Moore asked for more time, saying he was earnest in trying to light the lamp as rapidly as possible. Then, Blumenfeld said, the policeman caught hold of Moore, struck him and then kicked him. Several other policemen were summoned by passersby before Moore finally was arrested.

After Moore's arrest, his wife said, he became ill and frequently had hemorrhages. He also complained of stomach pains. His condition became so serious last Thursday that he was taken to the city hospital, where he lived only a day.

Heart Trouble, Doctors Say.

Physicians at the city hospital last night said Moore died of heart trouble. They said a severe kick in the stomach might cause heart disease. There was no bruise on Moore's abdomen.

Blumenfeld said that Leo Kravitz of 3711 Gamble street and Schwartz were also in the car. Other witnesses, he said, were Harry Podalski of the Barnum Hotel, C. A. Williams of 5192 Delmar boulevard, and John Buckland, who gave his address as 19 Portland place.

Policeman Duncan, at his home, 1562 South Vandeventer avenue, denied that he struck or kicked Moore. He said Blumenfeld's charge was a "frame-up." He said that as he approached the machine he saw the light was out and asked Moore to light it.

"Moore was reluctant in doing so," the policeman said, "and I told him not to bother, as he was under arrest. He stepped away from me and I caught hold of his coat collar and dragged him to the sidewalk. He resisted by trying to break away, but I did not strike or kick him."

The policeman said he rode to the Page Boulevard Station with Moore in the automobile and placed a charge against him of not having the tail light lighted. Duncan declared that Moore did not complain in the station that he had been beaten.

Moore, besides being interested in the jitney auto, sold newspapers at Broadway and Olive.

Recreation Season at Parks Will Begin With Concert Next Sunday

First of the Neighborhood Dances Scheduled for Columbus Square June 9th—Moving Picture Shows to Start June 15th.

The summer recreation program provided by the Park Department will begin with a band concert in Forest Park next Sunday afternoon, and will be in full swing by June 12, when the Fairground swimming pool will be opened.

The schedule given out yesterday by Park Commissioner Cunliff, makes provision for 140 free concerts and 28 moving picture shows.

The picture shows will be given at playgrounds and small parks, where the neighborhood dances, an innovation, also will be held. The total cost of the season's concerts, shows and dances will be less than $20,000.

A band concert is scheduled for week day evenings and Sunday afternoons between June 6 and Sept. 4. From July 5 to Aug. 21 concerts will be given in two parks each evening. Four concerts are scheduled for July 4.

The bands engaged will be conducted by Frederick Fischer, Noel Poepping and Romeo Bafunno. Extra concerts on July 4 will be directed by Ercole Bafunno and E. Pelzer.

Dances to Begin June 9.

Neighborhood dances will begin June 9, at Columbus Square, and will be given about twice a week.

An orchestra of six or eight pieces, under the direction of Gus Haenschen, will furnish music. A portable platform, 30x60 feet, will be used for dancing. Decorum will be maintained by a man and woman representing the Park Department, assisted by committees of the neighborhood school patrons' association.

The moving pictures will begin June 15 in Columbus Square. The program thus far determined upon only includes picture shows until July 12. The shows will be educational and entertaining. Travel and comedy films will be mingled with films designed to instruct in sanitation and hygiene.

Fairground swimming pool lifeguards will be selected in competitive tests beginning Thursday. Only 20 applicants for the 25 posts have appeared, and Commissioner Cunliff issued a warning to lifeguards who served last year that they must again pass examination before they can be re-employed.

Big Rally at Temple Israel for the Y. M. H. A. in St. Louis.

Plans for a home for the Young Men's Hebrew Association will be one of the many big features at the meeting to be held next Sunday in Temple Israel, King's highway and Washington avenue. Senator Reed of Missouri will be one of the principal speakers.

The Y. M. H. A. has just added 1000 members to its organization after a whirlwind campaign. The celebration of this event is expected to be the greatest in the history of the club. Admission will be free in Temple Israel next Sunday and there will be no solicitation for money. Moses Fraley will preside and one of the principal speakers will be Hanford Crawford, president of the St. Louis Young Men's Christian Association.

Those who are promoting the enlargement of the Y. M. H. A. in St. Louis say that the meeting next Sunday is to promote good fellowship and enjoyment, all in a rally.

'JOFFRE' AND 'YPRES' UNKNOWN TO 75 OF 80 OBERLIN GIRLS

Professor Makes Test When He Finds That Seniors Never Heard of Names.

OBERLIN, O., May 29.—Oberlin College faculty sat back and pondered, while many seniors and juniors eagerly began to pore over the morning newspapers. And it all happened because Prof. E. A. Miller had made a hundred odd upper-class men look rather foolish. During a chance conversation with three senior women, the professor discovered the words "Joffre" and "Ypres" were totally unfamiliar to the coeds.

So the professor wrote the two words "Joffre" and "Ypres" on the blackboard in two classes and asked just 100 odd students, juniors and seniors, what they were. Of 80 women five knew, and of 30 men only eight knew.

"Pathetic ignorance," was the verdict of the professor.

Former Federal Ganger Held.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., May 29.—Newton C. Sprading of Aurora, formerly Government storekeeper and guager at Fort Smith, Ark., was held to the action of the Federal Grand Jury at Fort Smith, after a hearing before Federal Commissioner George Pepperdine here today, on the charge of connection with the alleged conspiracy to defraud the Government of revenue on liquor manufactured in Arkansas. His bond was fixed at $2000.

GOVERNOR TRAINS TO SWING SHOVEL GOOD ROADS DAY

Will Head Squad of Convicts on Cole County Highways on June 15.

Gov. Major is playing golf every chance he gets and taking other kinds of exercise to get himself in condition for shoveling dirt June 15 on the Cole County roads at the head of a squad of convicts. June 15 and 16 have been proclaimed by the Governor as State good roads days, and as in the last two years, he plans to roll up his sleeves and put in a day on the roads. The Governor says he would like to make it two days, but he cannot because he has to leave on the 16th for Keytesville, where he is to speak at the unveiling of a monument to Gen. Sterling Price.

In his proclamation the Governor called upon all the County Courts of the State to issue supplemental proclamations, asking that organization be effected in each road district for work on the good roads days. The arrangements are under the general direction of Frank W. Buffum of the State Highway Department.

Expects Better Work.

Gov. Major, who is visiting at the home of Excise Commissioner Rumsey, 5265 Westminster place, said last night he expected the work done this year to be of a more permanent character than last year and the year before, because of the knowledge gained by experience.

Two years ago 250,000 persons took part in the work. Last year there were not so many, but the character of the work was better because the people were learning how. Still greater improvement is expected this year.

More and better work has been done on the roads in Missouri in the last two years, he says, than was done in the 10 years previous. The Governor believes the good work is only fairly begun. The good roads spirit, which is necessary before there can be good roads, has spread all over the State, he says.

10,000 Miles of Highways.

Up to two years ago, when the Governor called the first good roads days that had been called by the Governor of any State, the work of road improvement was being carried on by the road overseers of the various counties with State and county funds. Large sums were expended annually without materially improving the roads. Since the good roads spirit has been spreading, a system of dirt roads as intercounty seat highways has been created which are 10,000 miles in length.

These are dragged regularly at the expense of the State, which allows $15 a mile for the purpose, but before this help was given each community was required to put its road in good condition. In this improvement work more than $1,500,000 was spent by the people themselves.

The great improvement in the Missouri roads in the last two years, the Governor said, had not been due so much to the good roads days as to the spirit which was created by the good roads days and the voluntary continuation of the work atfer the good roads days had passed. In some counties, he said, good roads work was carried on last year for months.

State's Help to Roads.

The State gives biennially about $700,000 for road improvement. The money comes from the automobile tax, the corporation tax and the stamp act.

Jackson County has the best roads in the State. St. Louis County is second and Jasper County is third.

Since Missouri set the example of having good roads days, 15 other states have taken it up and the idea has been adopted in foreign countries. The Isle of Pines is the latest recruit.

There are 124,000 miles of road in Missouri, of which 60,000 miles are unimproved dirt road, about 58,000 improved dirt road, 3400 miles of gravel, 1400 miles of macadam, 700 miles of sand clay and 400 miles of patent surface and miscellaneous.

FIREMEN'S WHITE SILK TIES ONLY FOR "DRESS" OCCASIONS

Chief Henderson Says Men Are Not Expected to Wear Windsors When Fighting Fires.

Persons who pass fire engine houses frequently have wondered why the firemen they saw sitting or standing in front of the houses were not wearing the white silk Windsor ties which, it was announced last month, were to be officially a part of their costume, beginning May 1.

Chief Henderson, when asked about this matter, said the men had obtained the Windsor ties, just as he told them to, and that they were keeping them clean, just as he intended that they should. If anyone expected to see the firemen wearing the ties at a fire, or at the engine houses when they might at any moment have to start for a fire, such a person simply misunderstood the original order, the chief said.

The order was that the ties should be worn on the men's way to and from the houses, and at other times when off duty.

FRANCE HONORS AMERICA FOR ITS AID TO HUMANITY

Acknowledgment in Public Meeting of Services to Republic Since War Began.

By Associated Press.

PARIS, May 29.—What Americans have done for France during the war was acknowledged impressively by the French Government and people today in a presentation to W. G. Sharp, the American Ambassador, of four great albums containing autographed appreciations by eminent authors and poets and original drawings by artists of France.

The albums will be sent by Ambassador Sharp to the Congressional Library at Washington and 500 duplicates arranged for by the French Government will be presented to public libraries in as many cities in the United States.

The ceremony today took place in the historic ampitheater of the University of Paris. Among the notable persons present were President Poincare and Madame Poincare. In the presidential party were Mrs. Sharp, wife of the American Ambassador, and Miss Sharp; Signora Tittoni, wife of the Italian Ambassador, and Madame Iswolsky, wife of the Russian Ambassador. There were grouped around or near Ambassador Sharp, Premier Viviani, Foreign Ministre Delcasse and other members of the French Cabinet and the Russian and Italian Ambassadors, the Ministers of Belgium, Servia and many members of the French Academy and Institute.

Ambassador Warmly Applauded.

The occasion was Mr. Sharp's first official appearance and he was applauded warmly by the several thousand persons assembled in the ampitheater.

A chorus composed of 100 girls sang the "Star Spangled Banner." Leon Bonnat, president of the Institute of France, and Gabriel Hanotaux, representing the French Academy, presented the albums to the American Ambassador.

When Mr. Sharp arose to respond he was greeted by long, continued applause, which grew to an ovation when he referred to the warm feelings of sympathy of the United States for France, and said:

"Don't let any false prophets tell you anything different."

Continuing, Mr. Sharp said: "It gives me great pleasure to state that I have been specifically authorized in a message from the State Department over the signature of Mr. Bryan, to say that the Government and people of the United States deeply appreciate this new evidence of the friendly sentiment of the French people."

Poem on United States.

The ceremony ended by Mounet Sully reciting a poem on the United States, written for the occasion by Mme. Daniel Lesueur.

The albums are bound in green, with the flags of France and the United States in colors. The contents form a collection of drawings, verse and autographs unique in the history of French art and literature.

In the morning two large wreaths of flowers, including roses, lilacs and palms, were placed at the foot of the equestrian statue of George Washington in the Place d'Iena, one by the municipality of Paris and the other in the name of all the artists of France.

A large gathering of members of the Academy, artists and statesmen stood uncovered in the Place d'Iena as the wreaths were deposited, after which they all joined in cheering the United States.

100 Insane Patients Fox Trot in a Cabanne Hall

Guards Lock Doors During 3-Hour Reception Given by Dancing Instructor—Trip From City Sanitarium in Special Cars.

A hundred insane patients from the city sanitarium tried to outdo one another yesterday afternoon in the modern fox trot as well as the ancient waltz at a dance given for them at Rose Hill Hall, Hamilton and Maple avenues, by Mrs. C. C. Hardcastle of 5057 Kensington avenue.

Mrs. Hardcastle, who gives weekly instructions in dancing at the city sanitarium, suggested recently to Supt. George A. Johns that the routine of the patients' lives would be pleasantly broken if they were allowed to dance elsewhere some afternoon.

Supt. John agreed. He got the United Railways to donate two special cars for the patients' transportation to and from the sanitarium. Mrs. Hardcastle ordered 10 gallons of ice cream for refreshments, and asked a dozen of her regular pupils to assist in receiving the guests.

After all the patients had entered the studio the doors were bolted, lest some dancer might choose to stray away and not return in time for the homeward journey. Then Mrs. Hardcastle sat at the piano and played a dreamy Viennese waltz.

One Man Casts Aside Crutch.

Men and women, some past life's meridian, others barely out of their teens, separated into couples and glided over the floor. At first a few stood aside bashfully. A lively one-step followed. Even the wall-flowers could not resist that and in a moment everyone was on the floor. One old man laid aside his crutch and, for lack of a partner, tripped the steps alone.

The "two-step fox trot" and the canter, the latest dance creations which the patients had been taught, were next on the program. Until then everything had been extremely decorous. Then the strains of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" were heard. Instantly a dozen voices took up the words, and in a minute nearly every guest was singing the famous song as they danced about the hall.

The spirit of festivity seized the throng, and a few moments later all were singing another song. But while the voices were in accord, some of the steps were not. Some danced in tango time, while others were content to move to waltz hesitation tempo.

Winds Up With Quadrille.

The last number carded was the old-fashioned quadrille. This was danced in all the old-fashioned seriousness, even to the "ring around the rosie." When the last notes had died away each guest personally thanked Mrs. Hardcastle for the afternoon's pleasure, and all left for the homeward journey, happy.

Those who helped Mrs. Hardcastle entertain were her niece, Miss Mary Holman; Miss Alice and Miss Florence McInroy, Miss Frances Moorehead, Miss Bernice Shelly, Miss Ruth Hayman, Miss Irene Hays, Miss Mary C. Hallam; John Hinchey, John Bissell, Walter Hallam and Mrs. Hardcastle's husband and their son, Richard.

PITCHER DAUSS FIGURES IN DOUBLE-HEADER MARRIAGE

There were two reasons why George A. Dauss, pitcher for the Detroit American League baseball team, who figured in a double wedding of sisters at Clayton yesterday, did not take his bride in the afternoon to Sportsman's Park, where his team oppossed the Browns in a double-header. One was he wanted to keep his marriage a secret; the other, that he did not want his wife to see him lose a game, as he feared he would because of his nervousness.

Instead, he sent his bride to a picture show with her sister and the other bridegroom, while he won his game 7 to 1.

The two sisters were Ollie and Jessie Speake, who lived at 4023 De Tonty street. Jessie and her husband, James A. Gilbert, will reside at the De Tonty address. Gilbert is about 34 years old and is secretary of the A. Gilbert & Sons Brass Co. He lived in Webster Groves. Dauss will take his bride with him when his team leaves tomorrow on its Eastern trip. Dauss' bride is 23 years old. Gilbert's bride is 26. Gilbert is 42 and Dauss is 25.

Women Organize to Help Sew for the Poor of St. Louis.

As a result of Mme. Coates' sewing classes in the Famous-Barr department store, nearly 600 women and girls have banded together in an organization to help the poor. These women have been studying the scientific principles of sewing for the past five weeks at the Famous-Barr store. Mrs. C. W. Sutterfield is responsible for the organization that will aid the poor. There were three sewing classes and they were about to be discontinued. Under Mrs. Sutterfield's direction it was decided to continue the scientific sewing classes and to work for the poor of St. Louis. The club will meet once a month at the Famous-Barr store, and Mme. Coates will send instructions once each month. It is the purpose of the Famous-Barr Sewing Club to make over clothing for the poor of St. Louis. The officers of the new Famous-Barr Sewing Club are: Mrs. C. W. Sutterfield, president; Miss Louise Kreismann, first vice president; Mrs. W. E. Georgia, second vice president; Mrs. N. H. Breeding, secretary.

Besides the above there are many other St. Louis women in the organization, all of whom are on various committees.

Mme. Coates will try to organize similar clubs in other cities throughout the United States.

WASHOUTS DELAY PASSENGER TRAINS ONE TO 12 HOURS

Travelers From the West Over the Wabash Railroad Suffer Inconvenience.

Passengers arriving from Western points are telling stories of hardships and inconveniences caused by trains being delayed from one to 12 hours by washouts and high water. Most of the delays were due to washouts in the vicinity of Kansas City.

Among the exceedingly late trains was Wabash No. 2. It was due in St. Louis from Kansas City at 6:25 p. m. Friday, but did not reach St. Louis until 7:30 a. m. yesterday.

Several women who were in the day coaches and had expected to reach St. Louis by nightfall, had to complete the 24 hours in a chair car, with such small comforts as the porter could administer. Those with children suffered especially.

In addition to the discomforts of delay, there was the disappointment to many men aboard in keeping business appointments in St. Louis. Effort was made to lighten the dragging hours with cards, stories and songs.

No small annoyance was caused St. Louisans who went to the station to meet this train. They were told at first that it would be about two hours late. Then it was stated that the train would be in shortly after 9 o'clock. Still no train. Midnight saw a small crowd of hopefuls still waiting for the train, which did not reach the city until daybreak.

Rock Island train No. 24, from Kansas City, due at 9 p. m., arrived 15 minutes after midnight. The Missouri, Kansas & Texas No. 10, from San Antonio, made up lost time and came in at 9:25 p. m., being 75 minutes late.

Traffic from the west yesterday afternoon began taking on a more normal aspect, trains coming in either on time or only an hour or so behind schedule. Railroad officials said they thought the troubles of 48 hours were ended, unless there were more heavy rains.

MONKEYS AT ZOO FAIL TO SHOW TUBERCULOSIS SYMPTOMS

Their Cage May Now Be Visited by Public; Tests for Other Animals.

Thirteen monkeys in the Forest Park Zoo failed to shed tears and develop red eyes and other symptoms of tuberculosis when tested Friday by physicians of the Health Department. George E. Dieckman, a member of the Zoo Commission, said yesterday he is convinced the public can visit the monkey cage without danger of infection.

Tuberculin was injected into the eyes of the monkeys by Dr. F. W. Shaffer and H. F. James of the Health Department, and the reactions that indicate tuberculosis did not materialize, Dieckman said. Until the tests of all the animals are completed, the main animal house will be closed to the public.

Browns Manage to Tie Second Battle of Double Bill After Detroit Wins First.

WEILMAN IS TORPEDOED

Rickey's Tallest Southpaw Blows Up Early in First Game Against the Tigers.

By W. J. O'Connor.

Losing the first game, 7—1, the Browns battled uphill to a draw, 3—3, in the second portion of yesterday's double-header at Sportsman's Park, in spite of Dominick Mullaney and Ty Cobb.

Mullaney and Cobb are a tough combination to beat. On the day, Cobb collected four hits and four walks, scored two runs and swiped two bases, while Mullaney scored everything that was close against the Browns and betimes shaded for Detroit when it wasn't even close.

Some 4500 frigid fans fussed and fumed with Mullaney, the biggest umpire now at large in the American League. They "rode" him so persistently that Mullaney was forced to take frequent cuds of chewing tobacco from a paper pouch, this being a manifest tip-off on his nervousness. But after all Mullaney is only human.

So is Cobb, and even Tyrus erred. He fell into a trap in the eighth inning of the second sortie and was cut down at third base on a clever play that gave the fans more genuine enjoyment than all the rest of the entertainment.

Browns Tie Up Tyrus.

It isn't often that the Browns "boob" Tyrus. And when they do the hoi polloi, especially the two-bit portion, have a field day. They were particularly vociferous in the eighth frame of the second game. The Browns had just succeeded in knotting the score. Cobb opened the eighth with a pop double to left. Crawford moved him up with a sacrifice. Cobb, everybody in the park realized, carried the winning run. It was dark and the situation very tense.

Think of it! Cobb on third, one out, the score tied in the eighth with Perryman pitching. Anything might happen. Perhaps Cobb would steal under the cover of darkness. He had full steam ahead with no lights burning. It was a perfect setting for a great tragedy.

But hist to what happened: Veach hit to Van Howard, who broke in after Mullaney had banished Austin. Howard hasn't an arm like Zinn Beck, and nobody knows it better than Cobb. So Tyrus took a menacing lead off third. Howard saw this and bluffed a throw to first, then wheeled and handed the ball to Johnny Lavan, who was part of the trap laid for Cobb. Tyrus was effaced from the diamond on easily the prettiest play of the day. Much glee and large yelping. But Cobb should bibble. All he did was to reach first eight times out of nine.

Weilman Is Crushed.

There wasn't much cheer to the bargain bill. Carl Weilman disappointed everybody by his failure in the first inning of the opening disaster. Before Carl could get his bearings, Bush singled. So did Vitt. Cobb's walk filled the bases. Crawford's single scored Bush and Vitt. Veach's double scored Crawford and Cobb. Perryman then arrived and checked the run-getting, besides blanking the enemy for three other rounds.

Bill James appeared in the fourth and went well despite his intense wildness until the sixth, when Cobb's double and a wild pitch netted a run, Tyrus scoring from second. Hoch began in the eighth, and after two were out Baker walked and Dauss tripled. Dauss scored on Bush's single. That made the total seven. Shotton's single, a hit batsman, a force-out and C. Walker's sacrifice fly netted the Browns their only run in the opening epoch.

The second game was sad. Lowdermilk began for the Browns against Coveleskie and had one of his usual hard luck games. He was found for three runs in the third after the saddest exhibition of scratch-hitting seen here this season. Two were out when the trouble began.

McKee walked. So did Coveleskie. Bush beat out a dinky hit to Austin, filling the bases. Vitt scratched a hit through Lowdermilk, scoring McKee. Cobb beat out a roller to Lavan and on the Doctor's wild throw, Bush scored behind Coveleskie. There wasn't a good hit in the bunch. But the Tigers realized on the scratches.

The Browns picked up two in the third. One gone, Pratt singled. So did C. Walker. Likewise Williams. Leary was beaned, forcing in Pratt. A wild pitch scored C. Walker, but Walsh was out at the plate, McKee to Coveleskie. The score was tied in the seventh. Shotton singled and moved up on Austin's out, Young to Burns. The play was close and Jimmy kicked, being banished for his temerity. Pratt's third hit scored Austin. That was all.

Theiman First in Tower A. C.'s Five-Mile Race

The first junior Marathon race held under the auspices of the Tower Athletic Club, yesterday afternoon, was a brilliant success, in view of the fact that 17 out of the 24 entries finished and that good time was made by the winner. Of the 24 entries, not one was over 14 years of age. The Marathon was run from Jennings to the old Water Tower on Twentieth street and East Grand avenue, said to be a distance of five miles.

Elmer Theiman was the first runner to come in, his time being exactly 30 minutes. The runners were started from Jennings at 3:12 p. m. and the winner pulled up at the tape at 3:42. Ad Fraunfelder was about 10 seconds behind Theiman, and a minute later E. Stenzil finished third. In the small space of five minutes 17 of the boy runners crossed the line, showing how close and spirited the race was run.

Another Race Planned.

The club will award 17 prizes to the runners. The first prize, a handsome gold medal, will go to Theiman. Barney McCarty, demon director of the Tower Athletic Club, announced after the race that as the junior race proved such a success, the club would probably have another race next fall for boys between the age of 15 and 17.

Owing to the ages of the boys entered in yesterday's race, the marathon was not run under the sanction of the A. A. U. The order is as follows:

Elmer Theiman, Ad. Fraunfelder, E. Stenzil, T. Deck, Adna Wentz, A. Ellerbracht, Arthur Bracher, Joe Pfeifer, J. Lebrach, J. Gassel, C. Bokorny, E. Kaufman, Leo Woods, Leanord Walman, W. Madlinger, Elmer Neas.

Borrow, 7-Year Old Gelding, Wins Kentucky Classic

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 29.—L. S. Thompson's 7-year-old gelding, Borrow, carrying 126 pounds, won the Kentucky Handicap at a mile and a quarter at Douglas Park here today over a heavy, holding track.

Hodge was second and Prince Hermis third. Net value of the stake to the winner was $11,700. The net time was 2:10 2-5. Jockey J. Notter rode Borrow. Thompson has leased the Harry Payne Whitney stable.

Borrow's advantage over W. J. Weber's Hodge was an open length and a half, and he won well in hand. The most rousing fight was for second honors, Hodge winning out by a half length over Lew Marion's Prince Hermis. The next two horses, in a driving finish, Emerson Cochran and Short Grass, were heads behind the third horse.

Royal II, six lengths away, led the other starters of a field of nine. Roamer, Andrew Miller's champion 3-year-old of last year and favorite in the betting today, was eighth, more than 20 lengths back of the leaders.

At the rise of the barrier, the red of Roamer's rider flashed to the fore, and the gelding held sway for nearly a mile, when his impost of 127 pounds, top weight in the race, began to tell on his efforts. Prince Hermis took up the lead, but he relinquished command when Borrow challenged.

Jockey Notter kept his mount well up with the leaders during the early stages and when just about to turn into the stretch moved through the field with a rush and retained his advantage to the end.

Browns' Double-Header Today Starts at 1:30; Hamilton Due to Pitch

To enable Detroit to catch an early train for home, today's double-header at Sportsman's Park will begin at 1:30 and the second contest will be called at 5:30, regardless of the score at that time.

Carl Weilman is down to pitch the first game, while Earl Hamilton, recently reinstated, is booked to fling the final. Dubuc and Boland or Cavet will work for the Tigers.

Three-Eye Results:

At Quincy, Ill.—Quincy 1, Dubuque 1. (18 innings.)

Other games postponed; rain.

WALLACE RELEASED UNCONDITIONALLY AFTER 21 SEASONS

Greatest Fielding Shortstop of His Day at Last Succumbs to F. Time.

Among the 4500 fans who viewed yesterday's double-header at Sportsman's Park, few realized that they were watching Father Time write "finis" on the baseball career of Roderick Dhu Wallace, who coached at first base to the bitter end of his remarkable baseball life. Wallace is through, never to play again with the Browns.

Ten days ago he was served with a notice of his unconditional release. His time was up yesterday. Today he will be a spectator, the same as you and I.

Wallace is in his forty-first year. He was born Nov. 4, 1874, at West End, a suburb of Pittsburg. He has been in baseball 21 years, and every year a star.

He has been richly paid, but of course never had the advantage of snatching the dollar like the stars of the present day. He went through the first baseball war, however, and came out a financial winner, but Wallace in his prime would receive today twice what he got in the war of 1902.

Wallace has served the Brown banners for 13 years. In that time he has received in salary from Col. Hedges an aggregate sum of $72,000. He began in 1902, the first year of the war, for $3500. The next season he was boosted to $6500 on a five-year contract. At the expiration of the wartime contract he was cut $4500, a figure he received to this day. Whether he received a bonus for managing the club in 1912 is not known nor admitted either by he or Owner Hedges.

What Wallace Earned.

Prior to 1902, Wallace received $3000 from Frank de Hass Robison as a member of the Cardinals. In 1900 he drew down $2400. His salary for the other years, dating back to 1894, averaged around $1800 a year. In his 21 seasons on the diamond therefore, he earned, altogether $86,000.

Wallace's nickname was never worse than Bobby. From the day of his beginning in Franklin, Pa., in the spring of 1894 to the terminus of his long journey yesterday, he was a monument to temperance—temperate in his habits, his conduct on the field and his attitude towards umpires. He never drank, never smoked, unless on a bet. One cigar made him sick, and as Robert Burns wrote, "he gloried in his shame."

Wallace was one of the really great players who never broke into a world's series. He also has the distinction of being one of the greatest figures in baseball to be denied a "Day" by the home fans. They have had "Lajoie day," "Wagner day," "Cobb day," "Maranville day," but never a "Wallace day." This despite the fact that every effort once was made to hold one and Jim McAleer, then owner of Boston, went so far as to come here for the occasion, but something slipped. The day was rubbed off the baseball calendar.

The "Greatest Ever."

Withal Wallace isn't sorely in need of benefits. His temperate method of living has left him well fixed and

CORNELL MEN WIN ONLY ONE FIRST, BUT CAPTURE MEET

Seconds and Thirds Give Ithacans 45 Points in Eastern Intercollegiate Events.

TWO RECORDS BROKEN

Feature of Meet Is Oler's Victory Over Richards in the Running High Jump.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—The Cornell University track and field team won the fortieth annual game of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America here this afternoon, scoring 45 out of a possible 195 points.

Harvard was second with 26 points, one more than the total scored by the Yale athletes, with Pennsylvania and Princeton tied for fourth place with 21 points each. Dartmouth and Michigan divided fifth-place honors with 14 points each; Columbia was sixth with 10, while Maine with 9, Pennsylvania State 6, Johns Hopkins 1½, Massachusetts Technical and Bowdoin 1 each, completed the scoring colleges.

The caliber of the competing athletes representing the twenty-odd institutions of the association was shown by the fact that two new records were established and a third equalled. Wesley M. Oler of Yale cleared 6 feet 4½ inches in the running high jump after a great leaping duel with Alva W. Richards of Cornell, the winner of the Olympic Games jump at Stockholm in 1912. Oler's feat displaced the association record of 6 feet 3¼ inches made by T. Moffit of Pennsylvania eight years ago and the Collegiate record of 6 feet 4 inches made by W. B. Page of Pennsylvania in 1886. Richards in winning second place with 6 feet 3½ inches also surpassed Moffit's record.

One First for Cornell.

To H. P. Bailey of the University of Maine went the honor of breaking the second record. He sent the 16-pound hammer whistling 165 feet ¾ inches, in his preliminary trial yesterday, winning first place and adding 2¼ inches to the figure established by John R. DeWitt, the Princeton football player in 1902. Ted Meredith of Pennsylvania equalled the association record of 48 seconds in winning the 440-yards run and might have bettered this time, made by H. C. D. Reidpath of Syracuse in 1913, had he been pushed hard.

Although the Ithaca squad scored close to 25 per cent of total number of points, the red and white flashed across the finish line a first-place winner in but one event. It was in second third, fourth and even fifth place in the various cinder and turf competitions that Cornell rolled up her winning points.

Individual honors were divided between Meredith of Pennsylvania and H. L. Smith of Michigan, each of whom won two championship firsts. Smith showed that he was the king of the sprinters by breasting the worsted in both the 100 and 220. Meredith outran big fields in both the quarter and half-mile races, the Quaker flyer thus duplicating the performance of Goodwin, Harvard's star runner of the early 80s.

Summary:

HUG'S MEN POUND M'QUILLAN HARD IN OPENING ROUND

Timely Batting Wins Second Game at Pittsburg; Griner and Adams Pitch 0—0 Battle for Six Innings, in First.

PITTSBURG, Pa., May 29.

THERE were several strenuous contests today at Forbes Field, as besides that between the Cards and Pirates for supremacy in a double bill, there was a constant striving on the part of the fans and Umpire Byron to get the best of each other.

The weather man, not to be left out in the cold, also butted in with some disagreeableness that was mighty unpleasant, before the long day of labor was over. And out of the mess of bad temper, bad umpiring and bad weather, the Cards came through with one victory and no defeats in the two tries, all because of the excellent work of Dan Griner and Lee Meadows.

True, Blond Dan didn't cop a victory, but he was there with bells on when the Pirates got gay on the base paths and held them scoreless for five innings, when old Jupiter Pluvius butted in and stopped the bombarding of each other.

Babe Adams wasn't anyway behind his rival box artist, either, and started off like a house afire, striking out Huggins, Beck and Dolan in quicker time than it takes to tell it, and the old world's series hero of 1909 was in his element under adverse weather conditions.

Umpire Didn't Warm Up.

Freezing atmosphere seemed to ginger up the athletes, and both teams exhibited an amount of pep that seemed a pity to waste on games so poorly umpired as these today. Byron didn't pick out any favorites, 'tis true, but he kept the stands in an uproar and the players peevish by his attempts to look like an umpire.

When the rain finally stopped hostilities in the first game the necessary 30 minutes was put in waiting for a cessation, then it went into John Heydler's records as a tie.

The crowd wouldn't listen to anything else than play the second game, and after another long wait it was started, with the weather even colder than it had been at the start. The clouds were dark and gloomy, and everything seemed to be in favor of the pitcher, as the ball was hard to see as it came sailing up to the plate. But it wasn't hard to hit, as big George McQuillen will testify to tonight, for those Cards were determined to break the goose-egg business right off the reel and got busy with the ex-Columbus star immediately.

Manager Huggins hit the second ball pitched to him for a safe blow and Beck followed suit. Huggins going to third when Hinchman slightly fumbled the ball in right field. Cozy Dolan coaxed a walk and the sacks were crowded. Jack Miller hit the ball over Jimmy Viox's head, scoring Huggins and Beck, and the crowd gasped for breath.

Here were more runs than both sides made in the entire first game. But the worst was yet to come, for old Hambone Hyatt came through with a long fly to Baird, which brought over Dolan with the third run.

Hank Gibson, who hasn't been playing very regularly this season, because Bobby Schang is making good, butted in with an error and Wilson was safe at first. Butler advanced him to second when he hit safely, but Snyder forced the "Chief" at third. Meadows singled to center, scoring Butler, but the young pitcher must have slipped his eyeglasses as he kept on to second, only to find Snyder anchored there. The latter tried to get to third, but was an easy out, Gibson to Gerber.

McQuillan Benched, Kantlehner Tries His Hand at Halting the Cardinals

THAT was enough for McQuillan, and he went to the showerbath as quick as he got to the bench and cought Fred Clarke's eye. The next inning saw the young portsider with the unpronouncable name—Kantlehner—on the mound, and a change came over the scene, as the Cards lost sight of the home plate after he ascended the hill.

He gave way to Conzelman in the ninth because a fresh young man named Costello essayed to bat for him in the eighth, and very accomodatingly struck out. Conzelman let the visitors down without a hit in the ninth inning.

All this time Lee Meadows was performing right well, thank you, and with a five-run lead everything seemed comfortable. The Pirates annexed a tally in the fourth inning because of a miscue in signal work. Johnston sent up a high fly that Chief Wilson came in for, at the same time Manager Huggins high-stepping it for center field. They came together just as the second baseman got his fingers on the ball, but it fell at their feet, and Doc made second, and went to third on Hinchman's out. Wagner then was passed, and when the Dutchman stole second Johnston came home on Snyder's wild throw to second.

The last inning was rather a trying time for the Cardinal pitcher, as the Pirates seemed suddenly to find their batting eye, and Fred Clarke rushed several fresh men to the front, so that thy came near tieing the score, getting three safeties in that inning, which, with a hit-batsman, produced two runs. But Butler ran out into left field and grabbed Carey's high fly, and the danger was avoided.

Meadows had the numbers of the big sluggers today, Hinchman fanning twice, while neither Wagner, Viox or Carey reached him safely.

Browns Manage to Tie Second Battle of Double Bill After Detroit Wins First.

WEILMAN IS TORPEDOED

Rickey's Tallest Southpaw Blows Up Early in First Game Against the Tigers.

By W. J. O'Connor.

Losing the first game, 7—1, the Browns battled uphill to a draw, 3—3, in the second portion of yesterday's double-header at Sportsman's Park, in spite of Dominick Mullaney and Ty Cobb.

Mullaney and Cobb are a tough combination to beat. On the day, Cobb collected four hits and four walks, scored two runs and swiped two bases, while Mullaney scored everything that was close against the Browns and betimes shaded for Detroit when it wasn't even close.

Some 4500 frigid fans fussed and fumed with Mullaney, the biggest umpire now at large in the American League. They "rode" him so persistently that Mullaney was forced to take frequent cuds of chewing tobacco from a paper pouch, this being a manifest tip-off on his nervousness. But after all Mullaney is only human.

So is Cobb, and even Tyrus erred. He fell into a trap in the eighth inning of the second sortie and was cut down at third base on a clever play that gave the fans more genuine enjoyment than all the rest of the entertainment.

Browns Tie Up Tyrus.

It isn't often that the Browns "boob" Tyrus. And when they do the hoi polloi, especially the two-bit portion, have a field day. They were particularly vociferous in the eighth frame of the second game. The Browns had just succeeded in knotting the score. Cobb opened the eighth with a pop double to left. Crawford moved him up with a sacrifice. Cobb, everybody in the park realized, carried the winning run. It was dark and the situation very tense.

Think of it! Cobb on third, one out, the score tied in the eighth with Perryman pitching. Anything might happen. Perhaps Cobb would steol under the cover of darkness. He had full steam ahead with no lights burning. It was a perfect setting for a great tragedy.

But hist to what happened: Veach hit to Van Howard, who broke in after Mullaney had banished Austin. Howard hasn't an arm like Zinn Beck, and nobody knows it better than Cobb. So Tyrus took a menacing lead off third. Howard saw this and bluffed a throw to first, then wheeled and handed the ball to Johnny Lavan, who was part of the trap laid for Cobb. Tyrus was effaced from the diamond on easily the prettiest play of the day. Much glee and large yelping. But Cobb should bibble. All he did was to reach first eight times out of nine.

Weilman Is Crushed.

There wasn't much cheer to the bargain bill. Carl Weilman disappointed everybody by his failure in the first inning of the opening disaster. Before Carl could get his bearings, Bush singled. So did Vitt. Cobb's walk filled the bases. Crawford's single scored Bush and Vitt. Veach's double scored Crawford and Cobb. Perryman then arrived and checked the run-getting, besides blanking the enemy for three other rounds.

Bill James appeared in the fourth and went well despite his intense wildness until the sixth, when Cobb's double and a wild pitch netted a run, Tyrus scoring from second. Hoch began in the eighth, and after two were out Baker walked and Dauss tripled. Dauss scored on Bush's single. That made the total seven. Shotton's single, a hit batsman, a force-out and C. Walker's sacrifice fly netted the Browns their only run in the opening epoch.

The second game was sad. Lowdermilk began for the Browns against Coveleskie and had one of his usual hard luck games. He was found for three runs in the third after the saddest exhibition of scratch-hitting seen here this season. Two were out when the trouble began.

McKee walked. So did Coveleskie. Bush beat out a dinky hit to Austin, filling the bases. Vitt scratched a hit through Lowdermilk, scoring McKee. Cobb beat out a roller to Lavan and on the Doctor's wild throw, Bush scored behind Coveleskie. There wasn't a good hit in the bunch. But the Tigers realized on the scratches.

The Browns picked up two in the third. One gone, Pratt singled. So did C. Walker. Likewise Williams. Leary was beaned, forcing in Pratt. A wild pitch scored C. Walker, but Walsh was out at the plate, McKee to Coveleskie. The score was tied in the seventh. Shotton singled and moved up on Austin's out, Young to Burns. The play was close and Jimmy kicked, being banished for his temerity. Pratt's third hit scored Austin. That was all.

The Clutch Slipped Again.

Theiman First in Tower A. C.'s Five-Mile Race

The first junior Marathon race held under the auspices of the Tower Athletic Club, yesterday afternoon, was a brilliant success, in view of the fact that 17 out of the 24 entries finished and that good time was made by the winner. Of the 24 entries, not one was over 14 years of age. The Marathon was run from Jennings to the old Water Tower on Twentieth street and East Grand avenue, said to be a distance of five miles.

Elmer Theiman was the first runner to come in, his time being exactly 30 minutes. The runners were started from Jennings at 3:12 p. m. and the winner pulled up at the tape at 3:42. Ad Fraunfelder was about 10 seconds behind Theiman, and a minute later E. Stenzil finished third. In the small space of five minutes 17 of the boy runners crossed the line, showing how close and spirited the race was run.

Another Race Planned.

The club will award 17 prizes to the runners. The first prize, a handsome gold medal, will go to Theiman. Barney McCarty, demon director of the Tower Athletic Club, announced after the race that as the junior race proved such a success, the club would probably have another race next fall for boys between the age of 15 and 17.

Owing to the ages of the boys entered in yesterday's race, the marathon was not run under the sanction of the A. A. U. The order is as follows:

Elmer Theiman, Ad. Fraunfelder, E. Stenzil, T. Deck, Adna Wentz, A. Ellerbracht, Arthur Bracher, Joe Pfeifer, J. Lebrach, J. Gassel, C. Bokorny, E. Kaufman, Leo Woods, Leanord Walman, W. Madlinger, Elmer Ness.

Borrow, 7-Year Old Gelding, Wins Kentucky Classic

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 29.—L. S. Thompson's 7-year-old gelding, Borrow, carrying 126 pounds, won the Kentucky Handicap at a mile and a quarter at Douglas Park here today over a heavy, holding track.

Hodge was second and Prince Hermis third. Net value of the stake to the winner was $11,700. The net time was 2:10 2-5. Jockey J. Notter rode Borrow. Thompson has leased the Harry Payne Whitney stable.

Borrow's advantage over W. S. Weber's Hodge was an open length and a half, and he won well in hand. The most rousing fight was for second honors, Hodge winning out by a half length over Lew Marion's Prince Hermis. The next two horses, in a driving finish, Emerson Cochran and Short Grass, were heads behind the third horse.

Royal II, six lengths away, led the other starters of a field of nine. Roamer, Andrew Miller's champion 3-year-old of last year and favorite in the betting today, was eighth, more than 20 lengths back of the leaders.

At the rise of the barrier, the red of Roamer's rider flashed to the fore, and the gelding held sway for nearly a mile, when his impost of 127 pounds, top weight in the race, began to tell on his efforts. Prince Hermis took up the lead, but he relinquished command when Borrow challenged.

Jockey Notter kept his mount well up with the leaders during the early stages and when just about to turn into the stretch moved through the field with a rush and retained his advantage to the end.

Browns' Double-Header Today Starts at 1:30; Hamilton Due to Pitch

To enable Detroit to catch an early train for home, today's double-header at Sportsman's Park will begin at 1:30 and the second contest will be called at 5:30, regardless of the score at that time.

Carl Weilman is down to pitch the first game, while Earl Hamilton, recently reinstated, is booked to fling the final. Dubuc and Boland or Cavet will work for the Tigers.

Three-Eye Results:

At Quincy, Ill.—Quincy 1, Dubuque 1. (16 innings.)

Other games postponed; rain.

WALLACE RELEASED UNCONDITIONALLY AFTER 21 SEASONS

Greatest Fielding Shortstop of His Day at Last Succumbs to F. Time.

Among the 4500 fans who viewed yesterday's double-header at Sportsman's Park, few realized that they were watching Father Time write "finis" on the baseball career of Roderick Dhu Wallace, who coached at first base to the bitter end of his remarkable baseball life. Wallace is through, never to play again with the Browns.

Ten days ago he was served with a notice of his unconditional release. His time was up yesterday. Today he will be a spectator, the same as you and I.

Wallace is in his forty-first year. He was born Nov. 4, 1874, at West End, a suburb of Pittsburg. He has been in baseball 21 years, and every year a star.

He has been richly paid, but of course never had the advantage of snatching the dollar like the stars of the present day. He went through the first baseball war, however, and came out a financial winner, but Wallace in his prime would receive today twice what he got in the war of 1902.

Wallace has served the Brown banners for 13 years. In that time he has received in salary from Col. Hedges an aggregate sum of $72,000. He began in 1902, the first year of the war, for $3500. The next season he was boosted to $6500 on a five-year contract. At the expiration of the war-time contract he was cut $4500, a figure he received to this day. Whether he received a bonus for managing the club in 1912 is not known nor admitted either by he or Owner Hedges.

What Wallace Earned.

Prior to 1902, Wallace received $3000 from Frank de Hass Robison as a member of the Cardinals. In 1900 he drew down $2400. His salary for the other years, dating back to 1894, averaged around $1800 a year. In his 21 seasons on the diamond therefore, he earned, altogether $86,000.

Wallace's nickname was never worse than Bobby. From the day of his beginning in Franklin, Pa., in the spring of 1894 to the terminus of his long journey yesterday, he was a monument to temperance—temperate in his habits, his conduct on the field and his attitude towards umpires. He never drank, never smoked, unless on a bet. One cigar made him sick, and as Robert Burns wrote, "he gloried in his shame."

Wallace was one of the really great players who never broke into a world's series. He also has the distinction of being one of the greatest figures in baseball to be denied a "Day" by the home fans. They have had "Lajoie day," "Wagner day," "Cobb day," "Maranville day," but never a "Wallace day." This despite the fact that every effort once was made to hold one and Jim McAleer, then owner of Boston, went so far as to come here for the occasion, but something slipped. The day was rubbed off the baseball calendar.

The "Greatest Ever."

Withal Wallace isn't sorely in need of benefits. His temperate method of living has left him well fixed and

Harvard was second with 26 points, one more than the total scored by the Yale athletes, with Pennsylvania and Princeton tied for fourth place with 21 points each. Dartmouth and Michigan divided fifth-place honors with 14 points each; Columbia was sixth with 10, while Maine with 9, Pennsylvania State 6, Johns Hopkins 1½, Massachusetts Technical and Bowdoin 1 each, completed the scoring colleges.

The caliber of the competing athletes representing the twenty-odd institutions of the association was shown by the fact that two new records were established and a third equalled. Wesley M. Oler of Yale cleared 6 feet 4½ inches in the running high jump after a great leaping duel with Alva W. Richards of Cornell, the winner of the Olympic Games jump at Stockholm in 1912. Oler's feat displaced the association record of 6 feet 3¼ inches made by T. Moffit of Pennsylvania eight years ago and the Collegiate record of 6 feet 4 inches made by W. B. Page of Pennsylvania in 1886. Richards in winning second place with 6 feet 3½ inches also surpassed Moffit's record.

One First for Cornell.

To H. P. Bailey of the University of Maine went the honor of breaking the second record. He sent the 16-pound hammer whistling 165 feet ¾ inches, in his preliminary trial yesterday, winning first place and adding 2¾ inches to the figure established by John R. DeWitt, the Princeton football player in 1902. Ted Meredith of Pennsylvania equalled the association record of 48 seconds in winning the 440-yards run and might have bettered this time, made by H. C. D. Reidpath of Syracuse in 1913, had he been pushed hard.

Although the Ithaca squad scored close to 25 per cent of total number of points, the red and white flashed across the finish line a first-place winner in but one event. It was in second, third, fourth and even fifth place in the various cinder and turf competitions that Cornell rolled up her winning points.

Individual honors were divided between Meredith of Pennsylvania and H. L. Smith of Michigan, each of whom won two championship firsts. Smith showed that he was the king of the sprinters by breasting the worsted in both the 100 and 220. Meredith outran big fields in both the quarter and half-mile races, the Quaker flyer thus duplicating the performance of Goodwin, Harvard's star runner of the early 80s.

HUG'S MEN POUND M'QUILLAN HARD IN OPENING ROUND

Timely Batting Wins Second Game at Pittsburg; Griner and Adams Pitch 0—0 Battle for Six Innings, in First.

PITTSBURG, Pa., May 29.

THERE were several strenuous contests today at Forbes Field, as besides that between the Cards and Pirates for supremacy in a double bill, there was a constant striving on the part of the fans and Umpire Byron to get the best of each other.

The weather man, not to be left out in the colds also butted in with some disagreeableness that was mighty unpleasant, before the long day of labor was over. And out of the mess of bad temper, bad umpiring and bad weather, the Cards came through with one victory and no defeats in the two tries, all because of the excellent work of Dan Griner and Lee Meadows.

True, Blond Dan didn't cop a victory, but he was there with bells on when the Pirates got gay on the base paths and held them scoreless for five innings, when old Jupiter Pluvius butted in and stopped the bombarding of each other.

Babe Adams wasn't anyway behind his rival box artist, either, and started off like a house afire, striking out Huggins, Beck and Dolan in quicker time than it takes to tell it, and the old world's series hero of 1909 was in his element under adverse weather conditions.

Umpire Didn't Warm Up.

Freezing atmosphere seemed to ginger up the athletes, and both teams exhibited an amount of pep that seemed a pity to waste on games so poorly umpired as these today. Byron didn't pick out any favorites, 'tis true, but he kept the stands in an uproar and the players peevish by his attempts to look like an umpire.

When the rain finally stopped hostilities in the first game the necessary 30 minutes was put in waiting for a cessation, then it went into John Heydler's records as a tie.

The crowd wouldn't listen to anything else than play the second game, and after another long wait it was started with the weather even colder than it had been at the start. The clouds were dark and gloomy, and everything seemed to be in favor of the pitcher, as the ball was hard to see as it came sailing up to the plate. But it wasn't hard to hit, as big George McQuillen will testify to tonight, for those Cards were determined to break the goose-egg business right off the reel and got busy with the ex-Columbus star immediately.

Manager Huggins hit the second ball pitched to him for a safe blow and Beck followed suit. Huggins going to third when Hinchman slightly fumbled the ball in right field. Cozy Dolan coaxed a walk and the sacks were crowded. Jack Miller hit the ball over Jimmy Viox's head, scoring Huggins and Beck, and the crowd gasped for breath.

Here were more runs than both sides made in the entire first game. But the worst was yet to come, for old Hambone Hyatt came through with a long fly to Baird, which brought over Dolan with the third run.

Hank Gibson, who hasn't been playing very regularly this season, because Bobby Schang is making good, butted in with an error and Wilson was safe at first. Butler advanced him to second when he hit safely, but Snyder forced the "Chief" at third. Meadows singled to center, scoring Butler, but the young pitcher must have slipped his eyeglasses as he kept on to second, only to find Snyder anchored there. The latter tried to get to third, but was an easy out, Gibson to Gerber.

McQuillan Benched, Kantlchner Tries His Hand at Halting the Cardinals

THAT was enough for McQuillan, and he went to the showerbath as quick as he got to the bench and cought Fred Clarke's eye. The next inning saw the young portsider with the unpronouncable name—Kantlehner—on the mound, and a change came over the scene, as the Cards lost sight of the home plate after he ascended the hill.

He gave way to Conzelman in the ninth because a fresh young man named Costello essayed to bat for him in the eighth, and very accomodatingly struck out. Conzelman let the visitors down without a hit in the ninth inning.

All this time Lee Meadows was performing right well, thank you, and with a five-run lead everything seemed comfortable. The Pirates annexed a tally in the fourth inning because of a miscue in signal work. Johnston sent up a high fly that Chief Wilson came in for, at the same time Manager Huggins high-stepping it for center field. They came together just as the second baseman got his fingers on the ball, but it fell at their feet, and Doc made second, and went to third on Hinchman's out. Wagner then was passed, and when the Dutchman stole second Johnston came home on Snyder's wild throw to second.

The last inning was rather a trying time for the Cardinal pitcher, as the Pirates seemed suddenly to find their batting eye, and Fred Clarke rushed several fresh men to the front, so that thy came near tieing the score, getting three safeties in that inning, which, with a hit-batsman, produced two runs. But Butler ran out into left field and grabbed Carey's high fly, and the danger was avoided.

Meadows had the numbers of the big sluggers today, Hinchman fanning twice, while neither Wagner, Viox or Carey reached him safely.

TERRIERS ENTER .500 DIVISION BY BEATING TIPTOPS

Magee's Club Is Smothered in First Game and Tied in Second Yesterday.

ONLY 500 FANS ATTEND

"Bone" Play by Brooklyn Leader Enables Terriers to Tie the Count in Last Contest.

Fielder Jones' Terriers for the first time this season, have won as many games as they have lost. They gained this honor yesterday afternoon when they won the first game of a double bill from Brooklyn, 11—0, and tied in the second, 4—4, the game being called at the end of the tenth on account of darkness. About 500 fans were present at the double bill, easily the smallest crowd that has witnessed a Saturday game at Fed Park this season.

Some "ivory" playing by Boss Lee Magee saved the Terriers from defeat in the second clash. In the fifth inning, with Tobin on third and Vaughn on first, the fleet-footed right fielder was allowed to sneak home with the fourth tally, the one that let the Terriers tie, while Magee and Myers were cutting down Vaughn. That play really kept the locals from being beaten.

There was nothing to it in the first game. The Terriers took a liking to the slants of Tom Seaton, a star with the Phillies a few seasons ago, and Finneran. The fireworks started in the opening round.

Tobin, as Usual, Starts It.

Tobin started with a single. Vaughn repeated and Kirby walked. With a full house, Borton singled, counting Tobin and Vaughn. Miller singled, again filling the bases. Then Hartley was passed, forcing in Kirby. Deal's long fly counted Borton, while Miller came across on Johnson's lift.

That did not cause the Terriers to let up in the second inning, when they put three more over. Tobin and Johnson singled. This was enough for Seaton and Magee sent Finneran to the hill. Kirby went out, but Borton singled, scoring Tobin. Miller's fly put Vaughn across, while Borton came across on Deal's bingle. The Terriers added three more later in the game, all on solid hitting. Tobin with five out of five, and Borton four bingles in five attempts were the hitting stars.

While his mates were cracking the Brooklyn pitchers for 18 bingles, Eddie Plank was holding his rivals to three, which were widely scattered. Benny Kauff, the Ty Cobb of the Federal circuit, did not have much success. He fanned his first time up, walked the second, then rolled out and in the ninth fanned.

In the second game, Kauff did a little better. After going out on grounders his first two attempts, he came up with Magee first in the seventh and cracked out a home run. His last two times at bat he was purposely passed.

Myers Start It Again.

The Terriers were first to score in the second game, putting one across in the second, when Borton was pushed around on his single, through a passed ball and two infield outs. Brooklyn counted two in the third on a base on balls to Holt, Land's single and Anderson's triple.

It was in the fifth inning that the Terriers went ahead by counting three. Two hits and bad plays by the Brookfeds, most notable of them Magee's "bone" which allowed Tobin to score. The Brookfeds tied it in the seventh on Magee's single and Kauff's homer. After that both sides had numerous chances, but failed to put over a run.

He remained with Cleveland, later switching to shortstop, until the Spiders were transferred to St. Louis. In 1902 he jumped in the big raid on Robison Field with Jesse Burkett, Willie Sudhoff, Jack Harper and Emmett Heidrick, to the newly organized Browns. He has since been a member of Hedges' team.

No greater fielder ever lived. No man has yet been found who could tag the runner like Wallace. No man so graceful has ever been known to have lived. He had an arm of steel, even up to three years ago. He never, however, was such a much as a hitter, although three times in his career he managed to wheel into the .300 class. Those eventful years were 1897, 1899 and 1901.

Wallace had one whirl at the managerial problem. He relieved O'Connor in command of the Browns in 1911, but registered what was commonly accepted as a failure and was dethroned in mid-season by George Stovall. He returned to the ranks and served there until unconditionally released.

He said last night he had no plans for the immediate future. Recently his services were offered to Miller Huggins of the Cardinals, but nothing has come of the negotiations. If the worse come to worse, Bobby probably can play billiards for a living. There are few balkline players among the amateurs who can give the little Scot a tussle. He handles the ivories as gracefully as he did the runner going feet first into second. Just a delicate touch.

Hedges Praises Wallace.

Owner Hedges has this to say about Wallace's going: "We have released Wallace because his services are not in demand. Of course his release is unconditional. Wallace came to my club during the war days. His salary was $6500. After the peace agreement it became necessary to cut salaries. I sliced Wallace's from $6500 to $4500 with the proviso that so long as Wallace remained with my team his salary never again would be reduced. He got as much last year as he did in his prime in 1907-08.

"I'll say that he's the finest man I ever had dealings with. I'll go as far for him as I'll go for any man alive, because Wallace has been a credit to baseball, to me and to himself. I wish him nothing but luck. We had no alternative in dealing with his case at this time."

Wallace's record as a fielder and batter follows:

BRAVES' PITCHER INJURED; BOSTON BEATS PHILLIES

World Champions' Crack Twirler Hurt in Running to First Base.

BOSTON, May 29.—The Braves gained another game on the league-leading Philadelphians today, winning 9 to 4. The game, however, may cost the team the services of Pitcher Rudolph for some time, the result of an injury suffered in running to first base in the eighth inning.

Poor pitching by Philadelphia twirlers, errors by Cravath and Becker, and a double by Schmidt in the fourth which scored three runs, were the principal factors in Boston's score. Score:

Heart Songs.

THE INCAPACITED PUG.

A POOR but honest pugilist was beating up his wife;
She was the idol of his heart and comfort of his life.
That there was something wrong with him the good wife had a hunch,
Because his wallops seemed to lack their customary punch.
She murmured in her sorrow, as she rose from off the floor;
"You're losing all your ginger, don't you love me any more?"
And as she got a beefsteak and applied it to her eye,
The husband sadly hung his head and made her this reply:

CHORUS.

"I'll never win the championship,
My finish I can see;
I've had a great misfortune, and
The stuff's all off with me.
I'll never win another fight,
I'll never be the champ;
My good right arm is on the blink—
I've got the writer's cramp."

Wyckoff of the Athletics pitched at a knot hole all winter to gain control, but is wilder than ever, leading the league in passes. What the catcher ought to do is hold up a knot hole for J. Weldon to shoot at.

Grover Lowdermilk ranks next to Wyckoff in the Borneo League. There are times when Grover's proclivity for issuing free transportation suggests that the demon defier of the Interstate Commerce Commission must have put in the winter pitching at the mouth of a tunnel.

That's no reason, though, why the rest of the team should go on a vacation whenever Grover goes to work and put it up to him to win the game unassisted.

Smoke Up, Reb.

Golfers Practice at Glen Echo Despite Damp Course

Throng Visits Scene of Tomorrow's State Championship Opening to Get Workout—Both Men and Women Events Attract Record Entry Lists.

records and is greater than for any golf event ever held west of the Mississippi River.

The remaining 81 names are those of women golfers of this and other Missouri cities who will compete in the first annual State championship for women.

The entries that were received yesterday included three out-of-town players, raising the total of foreign entries to 37, or 40 including the women contenders. B. R. Scott and Kahler, Columbia, Mo.; R. J. Campbell, Kansas City; J. B. Heydt and John J. Kelley, Glen Echo; James H. McTague, Algonquin; George Reynolds, Normandie, and Miss Susan Baehern, Bellerive, are yesterday's entries.

Links Are Crowded.

By some chance, the skies forgot to weep yesterday, and as a result the links were given an opportunity to drain the accumulated moisture of the past few days. They both are now in the best of shape and with a bit of sun will be extremely fast. Over 250 men and women golfers took a final opportunity to try a farewell round before the medal play.

Yesterday's arrivals included Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Morrison of Kansas City, A. W. Warren, the association president, and Alden B. Swift, the State champion, both of St. Joseph. Numbers from Columbia, Hannibal and Sedalia also registered at the association headquarters at the Jefferson Hotel.

The qualifying round will be started at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning and after Alden Swift of St. Joseph, the present champion, and Jesse L. Carleton formally open the activities by driving off of No. 1 tee, golfers will start out on their medal-play round at three-minute intervals. So bulky is the entry that it is probable the afternoon will be almost spent before the final pair turn in their cards.

Minister Will Compete.

Should Alden B. Swift successfully defend his title in the week's matches, he will well have earned it; in so much as never has as large or classy field of golfers represented Missouri. The first man in the State—Gov. Major—doctors, lawyers and even a minister of the gospel are among those who will fight for the title.

Only Two Stars Absent.

The field consists of former local champions, ex-Missouri title-holders, Edward Limberg, the present city champ; men who have come within bare reach of the honor time and again. In fact, there are but two local stickers of repute who will be missing. Chris Kenney, who never missed a tourney, and whom "Chick" Evans dubbed the greatest player in the city, will not be in the qualifying set. Neither will Ralph McKittrick, another local light, whose name has been symbolic of top-notch golf.

Early season performances have pointed out several well-known players as favorites. Certainly, E. R. Morrison, former Kansas City champion; Swift, the present title holder, besides the host of other alien players all must be held in respect. But there is a feeling that St. Louis will make a great bid for the title this year unlike last year, when nary a local man carried off even a semi-final trophy.

Stuart Stickney by his excellent work in the "Chick" Evans match last week attracts attention. Jesse Carleton—tourney old—is outdoing his former records, while traversing the Glen Echo links. Harry Potter, Walter Michener, and Sid Overall all look good.

St. Louisans Numerous.

32 Players Qualify.

The championship class will be composed of the best 32 medal scores. Class A, of the next 16; Class B of the following 16, and a special class of the lower 32. Then the usual consolation tourney will be held for those who are defeated in the first round of match play. The qualifying round will be at 18 holes, as will all of the match play, with the exception of the final, which is contested over two rounds of the course.

The Glen Echo links has been refitted with bunkers and pits, the greens have been thoroughly cared for and the ways are fast. Authorities claim the course is one of the best in the country.

Of no less interest or consequence is the women's inaugural tourney. Golfing interest among women has spread like wildfire in this city the past year. Among the entries are women who have gained for themselves national repute. Miss Laurie Kaiser of Glen Echo last year succumbed only in the semi-final round of the Western Championship. Miss Grace Semple created national attention several years ago; Mrs. E. R. Morrison claims the championship of Kansas City, while Mrs. Alden B. Swift owns the St. Joseph title; Mrs. Lansing Ray, Mrs. Sterling Edmunds, and many others have records to their credit that draw attention.

The only woman player of talent who will be missing in the tourney is Mrs. F. H. Steedman, who was compelled to make a hurried trip to Philadelphia. Mrs. Steedman is admitted St. Louis' best woman golfer and her absence will be felt.

The women's tournament will be divided into classes similar to those of the men's tourney. The only difference in play will be that the final round will call for but 18 holes of match play in place of 36.

The "Form" of the Tourney.

The following are the women players expected to figure prominently in tomorrow's play:

High School Athletes Handicapped by Poor Track in Preliminaries

Over a hundred local scholastic athletes assembled at Francis Field yesterday morning and competed in preliminary events for the annual Interscholastic track and field meet which is to be held Tuesday afternoon. Qualifying events for both junior and senior classes were held in the sprints, hurdles, jumps and the pole vault.

In the junior division, the Yeatman athletes gained quite the best of the bargain, while Yeatman, McKinley and Soldan struggled for the lead in the senior class. Central did not show up as well as had been expected. The track was in a soggy condition owing to the recent rains and a stiff wind hampered the runners. Consequently the performances were mediocre.

Those to qualify were:

Senior high hurdles—Ronat, Mefler, McKinley; Johnson, Soldan.

Junior 50-yard dash—Nisbett, Lennon, Bools, Yeatman; Griesedieck, McKinley; Goldsmith, Central; Sparks, Soldan.

Junior low hurdles—Blumenstock, Soldan; Tuckerman, Berger, McKinley; Taggert, Central; Hamber, Wettel, Yeatman.

Junior broad jump—Crawford, Nisbett, Bools, Yeatman; Brugnone, Soldan.

Senior low hurdles—Leary, Craehle, Leffler, McKinley; Gayle, Central; Lindholm, Soldan; Keebaugh, Yeatman.

Junior 100-yard dash—Phillips, Sparks, Soldan; Nisbett, Bools, Lennon, Yeatman; Kirchoff, Central.

Junior 220-yard dash—Phillips, Brugnone, Summerville, Soldan; Crawford, Yeatman; Kirchoff, Central; Kilpatrick, McKinley.

Senior 220-yard dash—Liston, Hawes, Soldan; Lamont, Leary, McKinley; Woods, Cox, Yeatman.

Southpaw Alberts to Oppose Behnen in Feature Contest at Brook's Park.

Today at Brock Field in the feature game the Belleville Maroons meet the Alpen Braus. Manager Kavanaugh will send "Lefty" Alberts, a former Three-I League hurler, to the mound against the brewery boys, while Bascon will use "Ham" Behnen on the firing line.

At East St. Louis the Wabadas will fight it out with the East St. Louis Giants. Southpaw Fuhr will oppose Ryan on the rubber. At Belleville the Beyers will take on the C. A. C. outfit. Both clubs are evenly matched and the fans of Belleville should witness a good battle.

OHIO STATE COPS MEET

COLUMBUS, O., May 29.—Ohio State University won the Ohio Intercollegiate "big six" track meet here today with 64 points while Oberlin ranked second with 40. Alexander of Case broke the "big six" half-mile record of 1m 58 2-5s. in 1m 57 3-5s.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Dan (Porky) Flynn of Boston outfought Colin Bell of Australia in a 10-round bout here tonight. Each man weighed 197 pounds.

MADISON TEAM IS BEATEN IN FIRST ELIMINATION GAME

Shaw School Players Win 2—1 Battle for Survival in Public School League.

One of the best contested games ever played by Public School League baseball teams for a city championship of St. Louis was played on Forest Park grounds No. 7 yesterday afternoon, when the Shaw School team won from the Madison team, 2 to 1.

As a result of the defeat the Madison team, which won the division championship of Group C, dropped out of the race for the Post-Dispatch trophy and the grammar school championship of the city.

There is an outside chance that the committee in charge of the series may consider a protest that was raised after the game by the members of the Madison team against the ruling of Umpire M. W. Walker. The umpire, in the seventh inning, with the score tied, Madison at bat, two men on and one out, allowed a Madison player to take his base after being hit on the hand by a pitched ball. Later he reversed his ruling and sent the boy back to bat. The batsman then fanned.

Madison complains that the ruling should not have been reversed and that its team would have had a great chance to tie the score or win the game had the runner been allowed to retain first instead of being sent back to bat. The player batted under protest.

Deviggia the Game's Star.

The contest was remarkable for splendid pitching and defensive work by both clubs. Deviggia, pitcher for the Shaw team, allowed the Madisons but four safe hits during the game and struck out 11 men. He also made three safe hits. The Shaw School batters made nine safeties off the Madison pitcher, Powers.

The defensive play of both clubs was almost airtight, not a single official error being credited against either side. Considering the importance of the game this performance is remarkable.

Another school was eliminated as a result of the contest between the Clark and Columbia teams, the former winning 10 to 7 in 11 innings.

This game was featured by an exceptional finish and by some clever pitching by Harold Slupsky, a nephew of Abe Slupsky. Harold struck out 19 men in winning for the Clark team.

Kennefax Cleans Up.

The game was played at Kulage's Park, where the fences are rather close. All of which helped the performance of Catcher Kennefax of the winning club in the eleventh round.

In this period, with the score tied and two runners on base, Kennefax lifted the ball clear out of the lot, sending his teammates home ahead of him and winning the game.

The only other game in the public school series played yesterday was the final for the championship of Group B, between the Fanning and Garfield teams. This game was also closely fought, although not as cleanly played on defense as the other. It was won by the Garfield team, 3 to 1, and was a pitchers' battle from the start. The winners made but four safeties and the losers one less.

In the fifth inning, the Fanning team tied the score 1-1, but could not hold the lead. The great twirling of Ottenad for the winners held them helpless for the rest of the contest.

Several other games were scheduled yesterday, but ground conditions prevented play. The Bryan Hill and Benton match was also postponed. It will be played Tuesday, June 2.

It was announced that the three-cornered divisional tie between the Froebel, Lyon and Monroe teams would be settled next week.

Jack Leary, the Browns' first baseman, umpired the game between the Fanning and Garfield teams and was much astonished at the cleverness of the little fellows.

Ivan Howard, another Brownie, was to have refereed the Bryan Hill game.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS

PACKARD GIVES DETAILS OF NEW 12 CYLINDER CAR

A tumult of rumors relating to a 12-cylinder Packard has been crystallised by the announcement of the Twin Six. It is stated officially that the new model will be on exhibition in Indianapolis during the week of the big race, according to information just received by the Halsey Automobile Co. of St. Louis.

In external appearance the new car retains all of the well-known Packard characteristics. It looks much like previous models, except that the hood is shorter, the radiator tapered to conform with it, and the running boards set two inches nearer to the ground. The reduced length of hood permits a shorter wheel base.

When the hood is lifted startling changes are revealed. The 12 cylinders are there, all right, but it is hard to realize that such a power plant can be so compactly stored away.

The Twin Six motor is exactly what its name implies, two six-cylinder blocks arranged in V form with an angle of 60 degrees between them. This small included angle allows such accessories as starting motor, generator and water pump to be placed in the standard Packard position just inside the frame, so that the space between the cylinders is left clear and the valves are conveniently accessible without the removal of a single accessory. The acute angle between the cylinders also permits of a narrow frame at this point, with the result that the turning radius is even shorter than before.

The motor is of clean-cut design with nickeled trimmings and enameled cylinders. The bore is three inches and the stroke five inches.

The Twin Six has a remarkable range of ability combined with almost complete absence of vibration at all speeds. This result is due not only to the continuous smooth application of power from the 12 cylinders, but also to the fact that the small bore of the cylinders and the use of a special aluminum alloy in making the pistons have reduced the reciprocating weight of the 12 pistons and connecting rods to approximately half the weight of the corresponding parts in the previous Packard model. The superior smoothness of operation, which is inherent in this 12-cylinder engine, insures longer life to the bearings and effects an economy in oil and gasoline.

The new car will be furnished in two wheelbase lengths. The "1-35" is 135 inches and carries practically the present line of Packard bodies. The "1-25" is 125 inches and takes a new line of Packard-built bodies which are a little less in length. There is a new type control board mounted on the steering column with combination lighting and ignition switch. This permits the operation of a combination of lights with a single lever movement. The Packard company says that advance demonstrators will be shown in the principal cities within a few days.

TWO BOYS ADVENTURING

Two boys from Houston Texas, H. C. Rogerson and P. R. Smith, decided some weeks ago to drive their own motor car to the California expositions. They bought a Ford car which had already been driven 35,000 miles and started on their journey alone across the mountains and desert. They have written the Ford Motor Co. from San Dieg., where they arrived in safety:

"We are now at San Diego, Cal., after having traveled over 2000 miles of bad roads, across deserts where the sand was deep and hot, over rocky mountain roads, through heavy mud, and sometimes snow and ice, which in some places was almost impassable. We have had practically no trouble at all with the little Ford car. The only thing we did with the engine was to replace a spark plug which had a broken porcelain, and, considering the roads which we passed over, we think the car has broken "some" records; but, it will have to break some more records before it gets home. We expect to go through Nevada, Colorado, Utah, Kansas and Oklahoma on our way back. It's a long, long way to ride, but if the car can stand it, we can; and we have no doubt but that we can make the rest of the trip without much trouble. This little car has pulled through a great many places where heavier cars were stuck. The original front tires are still on the car, but the hind casings have been replaced."

CODE WORKS OVERTIME

A letter to L. G. Schubert, manager of the Von Arx Automobile Co., from General Manager Churchill of the Winton Motor Car Co., Cleveland, tells of the extraordinary demand of the newest Winton Six. "Nusize" is the code word, which means enter order for $2285 new size Winton Six. So many of the messages are arriving at the telegraph desk at the Winton factory that they are running night and day to keep up with the demand.

One reason for the popularity of the new car, in addition to its mechanical excellencies, is the fact that each buyer is given his individual selection of colors. The Von Arx Automobile Co., local agents for the Winton, reports the deliveries of Winton Sixes to Thomas Lonergan, model 21-A; Dr. W. Baumgartner, model 21-couplet; Joseph J. Gross, 21-touring; Walter Roth, New Athens, Ill., 21-touring. Sales made last week were of model 21A Sixes to Fred Rodefeld, J. A. Hutcheson and Joseph Lynch.

SELL GIBNEY TRUCK TIRE

The agency for St. Louis and surrounding territory for the Gibney truck tire made by the Gibney Tire & Rubber Co., has been placed with the Schelp-Budke Tire & Rubber Co., 3042 Locust street. John L. Gibney, vice-president of the manufacturing company, was in St. Louis last week and while here made arrangements with C. I. Albach, until recently with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., to handle the sales management for his company in the west.

MOTOR INTERESTS FIGHT UNJUST JITNEY BILLS

The Motor Accessory Trade Association of St. Louis, represented by its secretary and the Automobile Dealers' Association, represented by John H. Phillips, appeared at the meeting of the Board of Aldermen Friday afternon and protested against the passage of a bill to regulate jitney cars, introduced by Alderman Koenig. Koenig's bill is drastic and if passed would drive the jitney car out of existence in St. Louis. Alderman Luke Hart submitted to the two automobile representatives the draft of a bill which he proposed to introduce as a substitute for the Koenig bill, which was made less drastic, and on their suggestion he consented to several changes for its betterment.

The particular features of the Koenig bill were that it requires that each jitney car owner must give bond for $10,000, and that he must pay the city of St. Louis a per annum charge of $5 per seat, and that he must specify his route and stick to it.

The automobile interests of St. Louis believe that the jitney car should be regulated and placed under the surveillance of the city authorities, but they object to any bill or any regulations incited by the transportation interests of the city which will put the jitney car "out of the running." A public hearing on both bills will probably be held Wednesday afternoon at the City Hall.

COLE'S NEW GAS RECORD

Of all the reports made so far regarding the gasoline mileage of the Cole "Eight," the most extraordinary is that which has just come from C. H. Statler, of the Commercial Motor Car Co. of Johnstown, Pa. Mr. Statler drove 500 miles on 31 gallons of gasoline, an average of more than 16 miles to the gallon. Only two quarts of oil were used on the trip. During the run the car crossed Ligonier and Buckhorn mountains on "high" for the first time in automobile history. The previous eight-cylinder record for gasoline mileage was held by E. H. Baker of Buffalo, N. Y., who drove 129 miles on 8½ gallons of gasoline, averaging better than 15 miles to the gallon.

PIONEER BUYS CAR

F. W. Carter of Huntington Beach, Cal., whose trip to the Golden State antedated the pioneers of '49, has yielded to the lure of the motor car. He celebrated his seventieth birthday by buying a Saxon roadster. Mr. Carter's purchase of the automobile gives him the distinction of being the oldest Saxon owner-driver in the country.

When but a tiny lad Mr. Carter played with the ends of the reins which his father held over the backs of a plodding team of oxen as they crossed the plains in the earliest days of California migration. Now he sits at the wheel of a motor car.

SHOWING 1916 LOCOS

The Locomobile Co. of Missouri, 3033 Locust street, is showing the new 1916 line of Locomobile cars, and Manager W. H. Roesch is very proud of the beautiful designs on his sales room floor. The new car is lighter than last year although the wheelcase is lenger. Many new features have been added, including greatly improved fittings. The Locomobile Co. as heretofore will only turn out four cars a day.

ELWOOD HAYNES TO BE AT NEWELL OPEN WEEK

The Newell Motor Car Co., agents in St. Louis for the Haynes car, will hold open week at 308 North Twelfth street, their salesrooms, during the coming week. They will show the new line of Haynes cars which are unusually attractive. Elwood Haynes, builder of America's first car, and president of the Haynes factory, is expected to visit the Newell Motor Car Co. this week.

Mr. Haynes has been in the automobile business since 1893 and is still at the active head of the Haynes organization. He tells an interesting story of his first trip to Chicago in the horseless carriage, at which time he was accosted by a policeman while driving down Michigan boulevard and was forced to leave, inasmuch as the officer claimed it was against the law for other than horse-drawn vehicles to travel on the boulevard.

This first Haynes car is now on exhibition at the Smithsonian Institute. F. H. Burks of Kokomo, Ind., will also attend the open week of the Newell Motor Car Co.

DESIGN NEW HOME GARAGE

The Boeckeler Lumber Co. of St. Louis is about to put on the market a new private garage. This garage is built of wood entirely and by an ingenious device in the joining of the side boards it is dust-proof. The doors are unique, being in three folds and folding completely out of the way without taking up room in opening or closing. The garage is built in several sizes and can be extended in erection if desired and has a full complement of windows according to the size, with plenty of overhead room for air. The exterior is attractive in design. It is intended to be placed over a concrete floor.

SCARCITY OF LEATHER BRINGS NEW UPHOLSTERY

The scarcity of good leather, compared to the proportion of demand, has brought about an important change in automobile upholstery which, according to many manufacturers, will soon become universal. Instead of using makeshifts in the form of imitation leather, many motor car builders already have adopted a high-grade of waterproof cloth, declaring that it is even better from the standpoints of wear and comfort than the best leather they could secure.

While it was not difficult to secure enough leather for upholstering the 50,000 cars built a few years ago, the difficulty in securing an ample supply has steadily increased, until this year, when it is expected that fully half a million cars will be produced in this country. Today it is practically impossible to obtain enough good leather to go around.

Realizing that shortage in the leather market would become more acutet as the number of cars increased, automobile men have encouraged experimentation on the part of cloth manuufacturers during the past year or two. The result is a noncracking, nonheating, weatherproof fabric of such attractive appearance that many of the leading manufacturers are planning to use it on their entire output this coming season.

An added advantage of the cloth upholstery is that it contains no oil or "surface finish" which may come off in warm weather and mar the clothing of passengers. Nor does the smooth surface hold dust. A light brushing will remove any dust that may collect. Grease and oil spots can be removed with soap and water.

The best of the closed cars have always been equipped with cloth upholstery, as it was handsomer, more comfortable and cleanlier than leather. But until a few years ago this was not extended to open cars because of the difficulty of waterproofing and cleaning the cloth.

MANY ST. LOUISANS GO TO SPEEDWAY RACES

There was a great deal of disappointment among St. Louis motor enthusiasts at the postponement of the big race at Indianapolis from Saturday to Monday because some of them had planned to drive over, arriving there Saturday morning and returning home Sunday. Others planned to go by train and remain over a day in Indianapolis, returning Monday morning. Possibly 100 of those who laid their plans to go for the Saturday race find it impossible to be away from St. Louis on Monday.

However, each of the railroads between St. Louis and Indianapolis will take out special trains Sunday night, carrying several hundred persons who will gladly sit four hours in the grand stands watching the fast cars go by. Practically every leading dealer in automobiles and nearly all of the heads of the accessory houses and many men in the sales forces will be at the race and there will be a large number of automobile owners of St. Louis to see the winner come in.

DODGE CAR EXCELS IN SPOKANE HILL CLIMB

In competition with an imposing array of six and eight cylinder cars, a Dodge Brothers' motor car entered in the annual hill climb at Spokane, Wash., May 15, won first place in its class and finished second in the free-for-all event.

News of the Detroit car's splendid showing was received in a wire from the Seven-Seven Co., Dodge Brothers' dealer in Spokane, who were responsible for the car's entry.

The Spokane hill climb takes place on a hill 2074 feet long with an average grade of eight and one-half per cent. At one point there is a rise of 168 feet in two-fifths of a mile and the grade at this section approximates 17½ per cent.

PLATFORM OF THE A. A. A.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—What the A. A. A. stands for could not be set forth in more concise language than that contained in the report of President John A. Wilson, who, at the recent annual meeting in Boston, was re-elected as the head of the national organization of owners. Said Mr. Wilson in his annual resume:

"We believe in a logical and comprehensive Federal Aid to the several states in their roads building; we believe in the freest interstate use of motor driven and all other kinds of vehicles, as set forth in the Adamson measure; we believe that the owner of an automobile should only be taxed once for its possession, as evidenced by our taking to the United States Supreme Court the double taxation question; and we believe that it is a function of government for the United States to advertise its scenic and health attractions to its own citizens, encouraging them to become acquainted with their own country, rather than going abroad yearly because of the existence of connected road systems and attractions which are inferior to what can be found at home. We are on arganization of citizens who seek nothing except a general good; and the making clear of this particular point has been no easy task, even though it be absolutely the truth."

EMPIRE SALES RECORD

"With our 1916 model announced early in April, sales for that month exceeded by far any like period in the history of our company," says F. A. Babcock, sales manager of the Empire Automobile Co., in a letter to the Johnson Automobile Co. "On April 22, just two weeks after our new car was announced, our shipments passed the total for any previous month, and in the remaining days the average was increased daily. May has started out in a way that makes it almost certain that even April's record will be bettered.

"This volume of trade may be taken as striking evidence of the demand for our latest car. The result of the announcement of the new type, with its increased size throughout, was a rush of orders that has kept the entire Empire organization working at top speed."

FRANKLIN OFFICIAL HERE

A. Holmes, vice president and general sales manager of the Franklin Automobile Co. of Syracuse, N. Y., was a visitor in St. Louis last week, with the Franklin Auto & Supply Co. Mr. Holmes is calling on all the large dealers of Franklin throughout the West.

Mr. Franklin says: "Franklin shipments since Jan. 1 are 64 per cent ahead of shipments for the same period last year, and orders booked during that period are 89 per cent ahead of last year.

"We have 369 unfilled shipping orders. The car you will want six or eight weeks from today must be ordered now."

The Chalmers Motor Car Co. reports that the month of May shows the largest business that the company has ever enjoyed.

COMMANDEERED FOR WAR

Word has just been received by the Hupp Motor Car Co. that a shipment of Hupmobiles consigned to the Hupp garage at Pretoria, the Transvaal, South Africa, has been seized by the British Government. These Hupmobiles will be used for military purposes.

Following this notification a letter from the Hupp garage of Pretoria describes the action of the Government fully. "The entire shipment of Hupmobiles," writes J. H. Collins "which was received by boat load yesterday, was today commandeered by the British army.

"We consider this to be a very great compliment to the sterling quality and the wonderful work that these cars have accomplished in South Africa, but I wish to state that this has placed us in a very unfortunate position, inasmuch as every car on board ship was sold before it arrived, and now our customers will have to wait at least another month.

"There were many makes of other cars on the same boat, mostly cars from America, but the military authorities stated that they wished to have Hupmobiles and Hupmobiles only, for they knew what the car could accomplish."

JUNE 15-16 PROCLAIMED MO. GOOD ROADS DAYS

Motorists as well as dealers in motor cars all over the State of Missouri are interested in the proclamation which has just been issued by Gov. Major of Missouri, selecting June 15 and 16 as Good Road Days in Missouri. Under the proclamation the people of the State are requested to devote these two days to the improvements of the roads in their vicinity. Gov. Major will oversee the work on the roads around Jefferson City by convicts from the State penitentiary.

A MARKET IN RUSSIA

"The field for American business development in Russia is unlimited," says W. V. Logan of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., who has just returned from the Czar's domains. "All evidence is that Russia is having a great awakening, and there is no end to the possibilities there for American business institutions—whose representatives study Russian conditions and prepare for business, realizing that Russia is not the United States, and that American business methods must be modified and adapted when applied there.

"Germans have had much of Russia's commerce. No matter what the outcome it will be long—if ever—before the war feeling subsides. And that makes America's opportunity. Few people in this country appreciate Russia's vastness, its lack of development in industries of its own, and its possibilities.

"Take the automobile industry; when the war started there were only 12,500 motor vehicles in Russia—trucks, pleasure cars, large and small. The Government purchased between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 worth while I was there. After the war American automobile products will be very well known. The introduction is now being made. It is up to American manufacturers to follow the introduction [illegible] they care for the enormous business [illegible] be theirs."

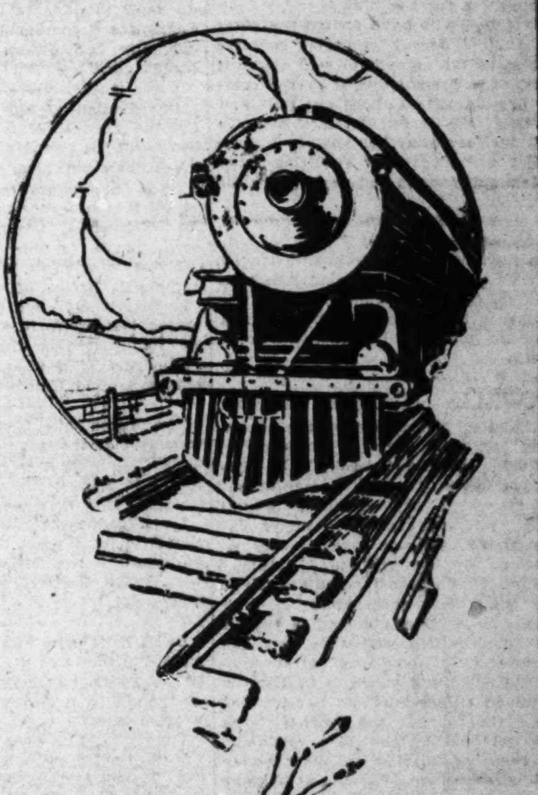
"—power of a locomotive"



Like a giant's strength in a man's body, the high speed, long stroke, valve-in-head motor with overhead camshaft gives the Chalmers New Six an abundance of vitality and competency.

And because of the unusual efficiency of the transmitting mechanism, this energy reaches the rear wheels—where it counts.

Result: The car has the power of a locomotive. It climbs hills like a chamois. It gets away like a racer.

An entirely new type of spring suspension makes the Chalmers New Six ride like a Pullman.

ANOTHER FEATURE CAR IS OLDSMOBILE EIGHT

Prompted no doubt by the success their "42" has met with during the past year, the Olds Motor Works are making still further advances in the moderate price field, announcing for the 1916 season two light-weight cars, an eight and a four, both weighing well under 3000 pounds, the former listing at $1295 and the latter at $1095.

The decision to produce an eight-cylinder car grew out of the fact that during the spring months the company found an active market for their big model 55. Therefore, the new eight was designed primarily to satisfy the market hitherto supplied by the big Olds and also with a view to creating a new market for a machine selling under $1500 with quality as its chief attraction.

The new Oldsmobile eight embodies the factors of economy, efficiency and refinement in a high degree. Although definite mechanical details of the car have not yet been announced by the manufacturers, the motor is understood to be of V-type construction, containing certain original features not incorporated in any other motor of the same type now in use in American cars.

By producing both the four-cylinder and the eight-cylinder cars simultaneously and in large quantities a great saving was effected in the purchase of materials, with the result that it was found possible to produce the cars at an unexpectedly low first cost.

SEATTLE TO MEXICO IN CADILLAC EIGHT

Touring from Seattle, Wash., to Old Mexico and back in a Cadillac Eight, a party of residents of Washington had good opportunity to observe the behavior of the car under all sorts of driving conditions. The distance covered was 4150 miles, and the elevations ranged from 53 feet below to 2000 feet above sea level. On a number of occasions as much as 100 miles were made without stopping the engine.

The car negotiated the mountains with marked ease, and practically the whole of the Imperial valley of California, where many miles of deep sand were encountered, was traversed in high gear.

TIRE PLANT INCREASED

Growing preference for red rubber tires as expressed by motorists who know tire values is compelling the Empire Rubber & Tire Co. of Trenton, N. J., to inaugurate alterations and extensions in its plant with the idea of increasing production and of improving the facilities for handling it.

Only those who have visited the plant in the New Jersey capital can have any idea of the amount of real estate it covers. The ground owned by the company has a front of about one mile and is a half mile wide. With this space the Empire company has abundant room to meet any expansion resulting from the demand for its superior grade of tires.

One new building is in the course of erection at the present time. A siding is also being run from the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad direct to the shipping room. Changes and improvements to be made in the shipping room will mean a big facilitation in delivery.

MAXWELL STOOD FIRST

In a report just issued by the Mason Laboratory of Mechanical Engineering, Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, covering 40 of the leading makes of cars which the school has put through scientific tests for motor car eficiency as well as for economy of operation, the Maxwell stood out first and foremost in actual results obtained under their close observation.

Among other things embodied in this report on the Maxwell they included the horsepower developed at certain speeds, the pulling strength of the car determined by special draw bar tests at various speeds; but the most striking figure obtained by the Yale engineers were those of bearing on the gasoline consumption of the Maxwell at various speeds and under different conditons.

CITY BUYS FIVE CARS

The Dorris Motor Car Co. has recently sold to the City of St. Louis, through the purchasing department, five Dorris cars. One of these is a two-ton truck, two 1500-pound trucks and two were new six-cylinder Dorris touring cars. The Dorris company now has 13 Dorris cars in the service of the City of St. Louis.

MEXICO'S NATIONAL THEATER STRUCTURE FALLING INTO RUIN

$6,000,000 Monument to Extravagance of Diaz, but Partly Completed, Neglected Since Revolution Began.

CITY OF MEXICO, Mexico, May 29.—The imposing National Theater building in this city is rapidly falling into a state of ruin. The structure is only partly completed, and practically no work has been done upon it since the beginning of the revolutionary period.

The erection of this theater was begun about 10 years ago, as a Government enterprise, and is regarded by many as a monument to the extravagance of the administration of President Porfirio Diaz. More than $6,000,000 gold have already been expended upon it, and it is stated that another $4,000,000 will be required to complete the building according to the original plans.

It was the purpose of President Diaz to make it the world's most magnificent place of amusement. Such of the interior as is finished is a veritable palace of luxury, but in the absence of any care much of the original beauty has already been marred.

The use of public funds in the building of the National Theater was one of the things complained of by the late Francisco I. Madero Jr. in his revolutionary propaganda. He charged that it was intended for the pleasure of the rich and that the burden of paying for the erection and support of the institution fell upon the poor.

During the period that Huerta was President a small force of artisans was employed in the finishing work on the theater, but for some time nothing further has been done towards its completion.

AUTO NEWS AND GOSSIP

Jos. H. McDuffee has been appointed head of the selling division of the Willys-Overland Co., to exclusively promote the sale of the new Willys-Knight car.

Wm. B. Cooley has retired as president of the Waverley Co. of Indianapolis, and Herbert H. Rice is the new head of this concern which manufacture the Waverly electric car.

The Motzinger eDvice Manufacturing Co. of Layfayette, Ind., has increased its capital stock from $150,000 to $300,000.

W. I. Brown has been made supervisor for Dodge Brothers, thus putting him in charge of the allotment of territory to dealers.

The Republic Motor Truck Co. of St. Louis sold through Fred Stegemann Jr. a two-ton truck to F. Tiemann of Afton, Mo., a 1½-ton truck to Alfonse Lerose of Jefferson Barracks, Mo., and through W. E. Lauer a 1½-ton truck to John J. Conrad of Jefferson County, Mo.

Albert O'Neil, well known in the local automobile business, has joined the sales force of the Von Arx Automobile Co., to assist in the sale of the Winton Six.

The Tate-Gilham Motor Co. finds itself in position to deliver all Dodge cars which have been sold up to this time, and these deliveries will be made as rapidly as shipments are received, but on sales made now it is impossible to guarantee deliveries before July 1. The company has orders in hand for 180 Dodge cars.

A reduction of $100 is to be allowed by the Newell Motor Car Co. to 31 buyers of the new Haynes light six who made their purchase some months ago. This is to compensate for the reduction of $100 that has very recently been made in the price of the car.

There is a good joke circulating on James E. Baker of the Dorris Motor Car Co., based on his having been arrested last week in Chicago and fined $10 for exceeding the speed limit up Hubbard's Hill, one of the toughest climbs around Chicago.

The Automobile Club of St. Louis is considering the plan to hold a two-days' reliability run with a night control this fall.

Dan Hood, assistant sales manager of the Milburn Wagon Co. of Toledo, O., builders of the Milburn electric car, visited the Cartwright Motor Car Co. last week.

J. F. Lanier, who has been handling the Diamond division of the B. F. Goodrich Co., has accepted a position in the East, and Manager L. K. Rittenhouse is in charge of both Diamond and Goodrich affairs at the St. Louis branch.

R. C. Hupp and T. C. P. Forbes have organized the Monarch Motor Car Co. of Detroit to build the Monarch "8."

The open week of the De Luxe Automobile Co. last week resulted in the sale of the 1916 model 43 Oldsmobile to E. F. Bergdorf and J. A. Cornelius of St. Louis; Pinckneyville Auto Co. of Pinckneyville, Ill., 3 cars; George D. Barlow, Kirkwood, Mo.; G. W. Beers, East St. Lo-uis, Ill.; Alton Automobile Co.; A. D. Bigham, Collinsville, Ill.; R. Tuthill, Anna, Ill., and W. A. Rosenberry of Highland, Ill., 3 cars.

A rumor is out that an important change will occur in one of the oldest St. Louis automobile concerns during the coming week. The change will consist of the transformation from agency to factory branch.

RACE MAKES DEMAND FOR SPEEDY ROADSTERS

"Automobile races, such as the great Speedway contest, have one very prominent effect on the motor car industry," said Frank E. Smith, new head of the Premier Motor Manufacturing Co., while discussing the 500-mile event. "They create new additions to the growing class of motorists known as speed fans, and I have been able to trace the approach of a speed contest for a number of years by the increased interest in raceabout and speedster models.

"Annually there sprouts up a big crop of "speed bugs" with the approach of the Indianapolis speed classic, and 1915 promises to establish a high water mark in the speedster output. Throughout the middle west there has been an extremely heavy demand for fast little road cars for two or three persons, and many of the younger drivers have forsaken the touring car for something which looks and is faster and is of such design that it quickly attracts the public eye."

CASE HAS ODD MISHAP

O. E. Sharp of Ramsey, Ill., writes to W. S. Roberts, St. Louis manager of the J. I. Case T. M. Co., inclosing photographs of a 1913 Case 30 lying on its side. He explains that the car was turned over because of a cave-in throwing it down a 15-foot embankment and that when replaced on its wheels it ran as well as ever. The only damage was a mashed fender and a broken windshield. He writes, "This car is still in first-class shape and good for from 4 to 60 miles per hour on high and can outpull any four-cylinder car in this country."

FIRST CHANDLER SIX TRAVELS 80,000 MILES

With over 80,000 miles of strenuous service to its credit, Chandler No. 1, the first Chandler six ever built, is still producing dividends on its original cost at the big Cleveland plant of the Chandler company.

As is the case with the first car turned out by any company, the veteran Chandler Six has been subjected to every variety of test that the engineering department can prescribe. On its maiden trip, Chandler No. 1 crossed the Allegheny Mountains in the dead of winter, en route from Cleveland to the New York Automobile Show. This was in January, 1912, and since that time cross-country work has been the daily diet of the old car.

ANOTHER ST. LOUIS CAR

The St. Louis Gas & Gasoline Engine Co. announces that it is about to put on the market a new six-cylinder car which will have a 45-horsepower motor in it. This car is to be sold for $2250 and is intended for delivery car use. The price will include the body according to the selection of the buyer. It will have full floating rear axle. Timken bearings, 36 tires. The same car will also be produced with touring body.

COST OF SELLING CARS AVERAGES 3 PER CENT

Considerable interest has been aroused by the statement recently made to the effect that the cost of merchandising Reo automobiles was less than that of marketing most any line of so-called staples. The statement was made by General Manager Richard H. Scott of the Reo Motor Car Co. that the total administration, sales and advertising expense of the Reo Co. is less than 3 per cent.

Previous to the publication of Mr. Scott's sensational statement it was the general impression, evidently, that the cost of selling automobiles was high—that, in other words, the buyer of a car really received only a small percentage of actual mechanical value for his money, the major portion going to pay champagne bills and other items that were recognized as a part of the business in the early days.

"The explanation cannot be made in a sentence," says Mr. Scott. "Efficiency in one department does not guarantee success. It must pervade every department.

"It is a fact that 3 per cent more than covers our total administration—meaning salaries of the executive department heads, the sales force and all advertising, including catalogs, photographs, etc. Of course I do not include in that the dealer's commission on retail sales, though that also is only about half what it is in the case of America's most famous piano, for example—an article the demand for which is so steady and so certain one would naturally suppose it would cost much less to sell than an automobile—especially as the average price of Reo cars is nearly twice the average price of the various models of that piano.

One reason why our administration expense is so light is the fact that no executive in the Reo company draws more than $5000 salary per year. Contrast that with the $50,000 and even $100,000 salaries paid by men in similar positions—but of lesser ability as shown by the results achieved—in other concerns—automobiles and other.

"Of course the Reo executive receives more—but they have from the first been content to take theirs in dividends on their stock from the actual earnings of the business.

"Another, and a very important factor, is the fact that Reo has always been practically a close corporation and there never has been a drop of water in the stock. Every share represents not only its face value in actual cash invested—but at this moment, if you will look at the stock quotations and note that Reo par value $10 is quoted at about 26 (which is 260 on the usual $100 basis) you will see that a share of Reo stock today represents more than two and one-half times its face value.

"Still another factor: there never has been, from the day Reo was organized, a change in a single executive or major department head.

REO

An Interesting Fact—A Condition Resulting Therefrom—and a Prophecy

REO INCREASE—the number of REO cars absorbed by the buying public as well as cash volume of business—during the first four months of this year over that of the same four months a year ago, has been greater than that of any competitor.

NEARLY 100 PER CENT increase over the same period last year. And in the six months that will end June first, it will be more than 100 per cent increase in numbers of cars, while amount of money involved will be still greater in proportion—for we are now shipping the higher priced REO Sixes in quantities.

THAT'S A WONDERFUL SHOWING. Yet it is only what the REO Folk predicted in the big two-page announcement—that, with this year's two REO models and the wonderful values they represent this concern intended to take the place that always has, logically, belonged to REO—the leadership in this industry.

AND THAT IS THE REASON for the commanding position REO occupies today—the superb quality of REO cars and the matchless values they represent, each at its price.

REO THE FIFTH "the Incomparable Four" at $1050 constitutes value that you know cannot be equalled anywhere at the price—you know because you have tried.

REO THE FIFTH has been the world's greatest, most popular, Four cylinder car for now five seasons—will be for five seasons more for we haven't the slightest intention in the world of changing it in any important detail—only, as in the past, to refine it from year to year.

DO YOU KNOW HOW GOOD REO the Fifth is? Let's tell you just one instance that proves the splendid quality of this car.

YOU KNOW OF COURSE that the demand for both REO models has been so far in advance of the possible supply that it has been almost hopeless. Why, the factory advises us they have four thousand unfilled orders on the books at this minute—while competitors have warehouses full of cars.

WELL, THE CHICAGO REO DISTRIBUTOR needed more REOs than his allotment called for. So he advertised in several cities for used REOs. Offered a cash price for them—had to pay well, for second-hand REOs have a very definite and a very high value.

GOT SEVERAL CARLOADS ALTOGETHER. Took them to Chicago and priced them the same as new cars of other makes—smaller cars than REO of course—$750, $785, $875, $900, etc. according to whether the used REO was a 1912, 1913 or 1914 model.

AND THEY MELTED AWAY like snow before a spring sun—and he is still looking for more second-hand REOs for buyers who know that a REO after three years of use is a better car than many new ones—more roomy and luxurious of course and more miles left in it than the other has in the first place.

REO OWNERS APPRECIATE their cars when new—but they learn to appreciate them still more as the months and years go by and when they come to sell or trade in the old cars for a new one. Then it is they find a REO is an asset of definite and of universal value, no matter how many thousands of miles it has charged against it.

"ROAD SERVICE BUILT IN at the factory"—you know the REO slogan.

IS IT ANY WONDER THEN that such a car at $1050 should enjoy such a demand—and that REO increase has been so wonderful as a result of that demand?

THEN LOOK AT THE NEW REO SIX—"the Six of Sixty Superiorities" at $1385. Where could a buyer hope to duplicate that value?

NOT ALONE THAT IT IS A SIX and "A Great Big Beautiful Car" but that it is a REO Six with all that term implies—all it guarantees in an automobile.

WHILE OTHER MAKERS ARE frantically jumping from one place to another—searching for enough cylinders to solve their problems and give them some kind of a foothold (and cylinders isn't the answer, it's quality and service and certainty and stability and low maintenance cost you are looking for) we have been working nights as well as days trying to take care of the demand for this splendid REO Six.

WE DON'T CARE whether the "ultimate" car be a sixteen a twenty-four or a thirty-two cylinder puzzle—our only concern at this time is to get enough REO Sixes and Fours to meet the demand.

NOW HERE'S A PROPHECY—make a note of it and see how nearly accurate we are in our prognostication.

THIS REO SUCCESS has created a condition that other makers find it difficult to meet. And we predict that they must meet it—can meet it in only one way.

THAT IS BY CUTTING their prices to some point where they will, apparently at least, more nearly approximate REO values.

SEE IF THEY DON'T—some have already done so—watch the others follow—and within ten days!

THEY MUST—THERE'S NO OTHER WAY to meet this problem REO popularity, REO preference, has created for them.

BUT THAT WON'T MEET IT. Price alone doesn't balance matters. Still there will be a problem for REO quality to be met and matched. And the REO guarantee—backed by the concern that is financially second strongest in the world.

AND THE REO PAST—"REO reliability in the long run"—that also must be equalled before you will feel that the values offered are comparable with those you receive in either of these REO models.

SO REO POPULARITY, REO demand is secure. No other can give greater value—for REO purchasing power and REO factory facilities have no superior, no equal, in this industry. And you know that REO gives the buyer the full benefit of all advantages REO gains by those factors.

SO LET'S WATCH and see what moves will be made in this extremity to meet REO competition.

AND MEANTIME ORDER YOUR REO!—else you may be disappointed. Demand is tremendous—and will be greater when rival makers have, by slashing prices in mid-season, proven that they recognize, as do all well informed buyers, the superiority of REO values—REO quality cars at REO prices.

FARMERS' CONFIDENCE HELPS CAR BUILDERS

The favorable weather condition this spring, pointing to big crops in 1915, is responsible for the improved business conditions indicated by the landslide of orders for automobiles, according to Stewart McDonald, vice-president of the Moon Motor Car Co.

"The farmer is the barometer of business conditions," McDonald declared. "If the prospects for bumper crops are good, the confidence of the farmer is reflected in increased business activity in the cities.

"In our business this spring, for instance, when April was almost double April of last year and May will be the biggest year in our history, the orders are about equally divided between the country and the cities.

"In my opinion, if there was no business from the country, if the farmer did not have confidence in the good crops to come, the business in the cities would not have been nearly so great.

"The confidence of the farmer has given employment to probably as many as 100,000 additional men in the automobile and parts factories in the past six weeks. The factories have been working night and day to keep pace with the orders.

"In fact, the parts manufacturers are having trouble getting as many extra men as they need. Just this week a representative of one of the biggest factories came all the way to St. Louis for mechanics. He took 75 away with him."

Dependability—versus—Ingenious Claims

Made as always,—the same reliable Construction, the same dependable Service—without anything whatever taken out of Quality, no matter what reductions in List-Prices are ever made.

MORE than 75 Concerns now manufacture Tires.

We believe that every one of these makes as good Tires as he knows how, at the lowest Cost his Experience, Equipment and Methods make possible.

We believe that the average Tire Manufacturer is fair in his treatment of Adjustments, and that few deliberately misrepresent their product, either verbally or in Print.

We believe that no Tire Manufacturer can afford to make statements in print about his product, which statements cannot be borne out by the performance of his Tires, in actual use.

We believe that the Tire has never been made which will not "Rim-Cut" if run "flat" for any considerable distance, and that many Makers, including ourselves, have always produced Tires that would not otherwise "Rim-Cut."

We believe that many more Tires "Break-at-the-Bead" than Cut at the Rim.

WE believe that the Rubber Riveting System of attaching the Tread to the Carcass (by means of a loosely-woven fabric, which permits the raw Rubber to percolate through its meshes and then Vulcanize to Carcass and Tread) prevents, to a large extent, Tread-Separation.

We have long used this in "Goodrich" Tires, as a commonplace part of our Precision policy, but without laying any particular stress upon it.

We believe that the "Double-Cure" process, common with a great many Tire Manufacturers under different names, adds unnecessary expense to Tire Cost, which expense the Methods of the Goodrich Factory eliminate through its Precision "Single-Cure."

We believe that the cutting out of needless expenses like this (which our Precision Methods save) constitutes one of the strongest reasons why the largest Rubber Factory in the World (Ours) produces the greatest Mileage—per Dollar of Cost—in its Tires.

And—

—"The PROOF of the Tire is in the Mileage thereof."

—Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires give, with most UNIFORMITY, the greatest MILEAGE, and Resilience, at the fairest Cost, per MILE, to Tire Users.

SHIP LINES FOR THE PAN-AMERICAN TRADE PROPOSED

Plan Submitted to Washington Conference as Solution of Transportation Problem.

DELEGATES TO MAKE TOUR

Meeting Adjourned; Central and South Americans Call on President.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The Pan-American financial conference came to an end here tonight after six days' discussion of problems which have confronted the two Americas as a consequence of the European war. The report of Secretary McAdoo, presiding officer of the conference, will be laid before Congress next fall.

Secretary McAdoo said he would urge upon the President the need of continuing the work of the conference. He pointed out that the delgates had no power to take affirmative actio on the question of transportation, but that each country, must be left to deal with the matter in its own way. "The grup committees" of the conference, which have done the real work, would be replaced, he added, with permanent committees in the United States to continue the work.

Frank A. Vanderlip of the National City Bank of New York, in a statement, summarizing the view of the representatives of the United States, said in part:

"There was one point on which every member in attendance at the conference seemed to agree, and that was that the greatest obstacle in the way of trade development is a lack of transportation facilities. There were wide diversions of opinion as to how to meet the demand, but there was unanimous agreement that it must be met before really great results are attained."

Banquet Ends Conference.

A resolution presented by President John H. Fahey of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was adopted, pledging the support of that organization to further a better understanding between the two Americas. Fahey said he expected to meet in New York next week with Vanderlip and Senor Aldao, of the Argentine republic, to draft a code to govern the settlement of commercial disputes by arbitration.

The conference ended tonight with a banquet in the Pan-American Union Building. On Monday the delegates will start on a two-weeks' tour of the Middle West and East and will wind up in New York about the middle of June.

Plans for steam lines between the United States and South America were presented today by the Transportation Committee. Two subcommittees reports differing only in proposals of procedure were submitted.

One, signed by Delegates Alden of Argentina, Caval Canti of Brazil and Cosio of Uruguay, proposes:

A fast line of 10,000-ton steamers between the United States and Rio de Janeiro, Montevedio and Buenos Aires, capable of making the voyage to Rio in 15 days.

Bids by Dec. 31.

That, as compensation for services rendered, such ships be exempt for five years from all fiscal charges and enjoy all facilities granted any other vessels.

Bids would be called for not later than Dec. 31, 1915; would be acted upon within three months, and, if possible, awarded to the builder who gives earliest delivery. The North and South American Governments would agree on the division of expense.

It was agreed between the other members and Delegate Veraga of Chile that there should be two lines of fast steamers, oneto serve Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina and the other for Ecuador, Peru and Chile. Delegate Alzamora, while concurring in the report, did not sign it for lack of authority from his Government, as was the case with Delegate Gonzales of Ecuador.

Delegate Verage, in a separate report, made these proposals:

Organization of a corporation with stock offered to public subscription and any unsubscribed shares to be taken by the United States and Latin-American Governments; proportion to be agreed upon later.

Organize Under New York Law.

That the corporation be organized under New York law; that the steamers shall be registered in different countries in proportion to capital subscribed.

That vessels be of 5000 ton minimum and minimum speed of 16 miles an hour.

That the board of directors be chosen by subscribing countries in proportion to their holdings.

Sol Wexler of New Orleans, in behalf of the Nicaraguan group, today spoke favorably of the Nicaraguan treaty and declared its ratification would certainly result in stabilizing conditions in that republic.

Secretary Bryan told the delegates the State Department was deeply concerned over the treaty and that he was anxious that Central American nations should understand this Government did not intend to antagonize the interest of adjacent countries in making such a pact.

Delegates Visit President.

The general session was adjourned shortly after noon so the delegates might visit the White House to say good-by to President Wilson. The President had received the delegates on the opening day of the conference, but saw them again today as a special mark of his interest in the meeting. The President made no address, but told each delegate how pleased he was by the interest shown in the conference and over the prospects for definite results.

Vice President Quinonez of Salvador presented to President Wilson a letter from the President of his country expressing the warm sentiments of Salvador. The President was told by many of the delegates that when they returned home they would do everything possible to bring about closer business relations between their countries and the United States.

Delegates of the Central and South American countries, who last week attended the first Pan-American financial conference in Washington and arranged to solve commercial problems growing out of the war and to promote better understanding among the American trading interests, will arrive in St. Louis at 9 a. m. next Saturday on a special train, to see the city, under the auspices of the Business Men's League.

Guests of United States.

This stop is included in a tour arranged to take in all the cities of the United States where industrial, commercial and social conditions will be studied, with a view to creating closer business relations. Throughout the trip the delegates will be the guests of the United States, Congress having appropriated $50,000 for this purpose. An elaborate program for the entertainment of the visitors while here has been arranged.

The party will arrive here in charge of A. J. Peters, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who is the special representative of Secretary McAdoo. A Reception Committee from the Business Men's League will meet them at Union Station with four special cars, tendered by the United Railways, in which they will be conveyed to the Planters Hotel.

Gov. Major and Mayor Kiel also will meet the delegates at Union Station. They will be escorted to the hotel by 300 members of the national guard, the regimental band and 100 mounted police.

At 10 o'clock the party, divided into groups, will be shown through the financial institutions of St. Louis. A luncheon will be given at the Planters Hotel at 12:30 p. m. by the Business Men's League, to which all of the members of the league will be invited, and addresses will be made by some of the prominent members of the Pan-American delegation.

Bankers to Be Hosts.

This luncheon will end at 2:30, when the party will be taken in charge by the bankers of St. Louis and taken for an automobile ride through the business portion of the city, then west to Grand avenue, south on Grand avenue to Tower Grove Park, west through Tower Grove Park and thence to Shaw's Garden, where they will spend an hour. From Shaw's Garden they will be taken to Sunset Inn, where a dinner will be given them by the bankers.

At 10 a. m. Sunday the Committee on Entertainment, appointed for the day, will be at the Planters Hotel with automobiles and the party will be given a tour of the residence portions of the city and through Forest Park. This ride will end at the St. Louis Club at noon, where a luncheon will be given by the Business Men's League. At its close they will be taken to the Union Station, where their special train will leave at 3 o'clock for Chicago.

Town to Give Chest of Silver to Miss Clark

The CHAMP CLARK HOME

MISS GENEVIEVE CLARK.

LOUISIANA, Mo., May 29.—For some time the question of what to give Miss Genevieve Clark as a present when she becomes the bride of J. M. Thomson of New Orleans, has been uppermost in the minds of the admirers of the daughter of the Speaker of the House, but the matter has been decided, and it will be a chest of handsome silver.

The present will come from the citizens of Louisiana, irrespective of party, making it distinctly a Louisiana present. It will be highly prized, as this city was the first stopping place of Speaker Clark when he landed in Pike County in 1875.

Those close to Clark say that there will be no invitations issued to anyone in the Ninth Congressional District, but there will be a general invitation to all the people in the Speaker's district to attend the wedding, which will in all probability take place on the lawn at the Clark home in Bowling Green, June 30.

Bowling Green on that day expects the largest crowd ever assembled in the city.

Thomson is 38 years old and Miss Clark is 19. Thomson is the owner and publisher of the New Orleans Item. He met Miss Clark at the Baltimore convention of the Democratic party in 1912.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE PUTS EMPLOYES BACK ON FULL PAY

Director in This Country Will Only Say It Shows Company's Strength and Confidence.

NEW YORK, May 29.—William G. Sickel, resident director of the Hamburg-American line, has received from Hamburg an order to put back on full pay all the employes of the line, beginning June 1.

Sickel said today that this order included all office employes, of whom, he estimates there are in this port between 350 and 400, and all captains and officers of 13 steamships laid up here. It applies, Sickels said, to office employes and captains and officers of interned and laid-up ships of the company all over the world.

"I don't know what international significance this order has," said Sickel. "You can figure on that as well as I can, whether it portends the end of the war or not, but I should say, and anybody would say the same thing, that it shows the great strength and confidence of the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. This is the only deduction I can make."

When the European war began salaries of local employes were cut from 15 to 25 per cent.

According to the officials of the line, all the employes affected by the restoration of salaries are now at work.

Sentence of Publisher Upheld.

JACKSON, Tenn., May 29.—The sentence against Gilbert D. Raine, publisher of the Memphis News-Scimitar, for contempt of court in publishing a Circuit Court order prohibiting publication of certain affidavits in a will case, was upheld today by the Tennessee Supreme Court. The affidavits themselves were not published. Raine was sentenced to serve 10 days in jail and pay a fine of $50.

CELEBRATES HIS 35TH ANNIVERSARY ON POST-DISPATCH

William M. Smith Recalls Incidents in His Relations With the Paper's Founder.

William M. Smith of 5163 Von Versen avenue, yesterday celebrated the 35th anniversary of his connection with the Post-Dispatch as an employe in the composing room. He is the oldest employe, in point of length of service, in that department.

Except for a few months of illness, Mr. Smith has worked continuously for the Post-Dispatch since he was employed May 29, 1880, at the age of 24, by the late Joseph Pulitzer, founder of the Post-Dispatch. Before he came to the Post-Dispatch Mr. Smith had been employed as a printer by country newspapers.

The Post-Dispatch at that time was at 111 North Broadway, where the counting room and presses were on the first floor and the editorial offices on the second. There were then 12 to 15 printers employed setting type by hand, as that was before the day of the linotype machine. Typewriters also had not come into use, and all "copy" was written by hand.

Special Work on Editorials.

Mr. Smith, yesterday, told how, for several years, his chief work was to set the editorials written by Mr. Pulitzer, who at that time had active charge of all departments of the paper. Mr. Pulitzer's editorials, Mr. Smith said, were much admired by his employes, who sometimes found deciphering of the long hand in which they were written difficult. Mr. Smith said he became particularly adept at this and thereafter was entrusted with putting them in type and with making up the editorial page. He since has continued to make up the editorial page.

"Mr. Pulitzer did not seem to take any care about how he wrote the copy for his editorials," Mr. Smith said, "and often ignored punctuation and capitalization. But he was very particular about the appearance of the matter in type. He would correct the proofs and sometimes they had to be almost entirely reset. Often I have wished I had saved some of those peculiarly marked proofs."

Apprehensive Over New York Move.

Mr. Smith told with what regret the employes, who had come to think so much of Mr. Pulitzer, saw him leave St. Louis for New York in 1883. When he purchased the New York World they felt his days as a newspaper proprietor were about to end. They believed, Mr. Smith said, that he could not successfully conduct the two papers. They were agreeably surprised when the constant and rapid growth of the Post-Dispatch assured them that a capable man was directing it.

During his service for the Post-Dispatch Mr. Smith has moved with it successively to the Market street and Olive street buildings and to the present home of the paper on Broadway. In January, 1917, the Post-Dispatch expects to move to its new home at Twelfth and Olive streets. Mr. Smith has seen the force in the composing room increase to more than 100 men, and where all the type once was set by hand 29 linotypes are now used.

ELECTRICITY IN MAN'S BODY MIGHT SET OFF EXPLOSIVE

Expert Puts Forward New Theory to Account for Accident.

LONDON, May 29.—The theory that a man's body may contain enough electricity to set off a charge of explosive was put forward this week by a Government expert on combustibles to account for an explosion at Stowmarket, which resulted in the death of four men.

Maj. Cooper-Key, the expert, expressed the opinion that one of the men had accumulated electricity in his body, "and not having earthed himself, a spark passed through a dangerous commodity and so caused it to explode." He added: "It was an exceptional acident, which could probably have been prevented by the insertion of a metal stud in the worker's rubber overshoe. A regulation to this effect will probably be made in the future."

WITH THE FRENCH WOUNDED

The Woman's Sacrifice.

Away from the battlefield one sees war stripped of its glamor. We see the heroic work of nurses who are on duty day and night. There is devotion, self-sacrifice, suffering patriotism—qualities which only a great war and its terrible consequences can inspire to the highest development. The women everywhere are helping and everywhere one see self-sacrifice and devotion to country.

The women of the United States do not know how fortunate they are. Here there are plenty of women who suffer in silence, whose strength is out of proportion to their ambition. Their hands are tied by some chronic disease common to womankind; that weak back, accompanied by pain here or there, extreme nervousness, sleeplessness, maybe fainting spells or spasms, are all signals of distress for women. She may be growing from girlhood into womanhood, passing from womanhood to motherhood. At any or all of these periods of a woman's life she should take a tonic and nervine, prescribed for just such cases by a physician of vast experience in the diseases of women. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has successfully treated more cases the past fifty years than any other known remedy. When you feel dull, headachy, backache, dizzy, or perhaps hot flashes, there is nothing you can accomplish, nothing you can enjoy. You can find permanent relief in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is sold by medicine dealers, or trial box by mail from Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., on receipt of 50 cents or one dollar for large box.—Adv.

FRANK'S HEARING FOR COMMUTATION BEGINS TOMORROW

Prison Commission's Consideration of Appeal to Be Virtually Retrial.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 29.—Hearing on the appeal of Leo M. Frank, convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan, for commutation from death to life imprisonment, will begin before the Prison Commission of Georgia early Monday morning. The board consists of three members—R. E. Davison, chairman; L. L. Hainey and T. E. Patterson.

Owing to the unusual interest taken in the case, the hearing will be in effect a retrial of the case. Solicitor General Dorsey, who prosecuted Frank, in a letter to the Commission, made public tonight, opposes commutation of sentence.

Until the commission has acted, the Government will take no part. This was made clear tonight by Gov. Slaton when asked by a Post-Dispatch correspondent what course he would pursue toward delegations coming here to see him about the appeal.

Will Not Hear Arguments.

"The matter is in the hands of the Prison Commission now and until a recommendation has been made by that body I have nothing to do with it," he said. "Of course, I shall be glad to devote a few minutes to delegations, as I am always willing to do toward visitors, but this much is clear—I have no intention of listening to any arguments on commutation at present. I shall refer all such delegations to the Prison Commission."

It is still a matter of doubt as to which Governor will hear the appeal. Indications point to Gov. Slaton as the man. Tonight he stated that the case might not come to him.

Judge Nat Harris, who becomes Governor after June 26, has already announced that the Frank case is a Georgia case and that if it comes to him he will handle it from that angle and pay absolutely no attention to the opinions or the pleas of anyone outside Georgia.

There will be many visitors in Atlanta to remain here during the hearing. Also there will be delegations to plead for Frank. Tomorrow representatives of the Anti-Capital Punishment Society of Chicago are expected. They are the Rev. Johnstone Meyers, Immanuel Baptist Church; Judge John O'Connor, Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, and Mrs. Mary Blaney Fisher.

From Savannah will come Judge Sam Adams, one of Georgia's ablest jurists; A. Lawrence, Senator-elect, and T. Mayhew Cunningham. It is understood Macon will also send a delegation.

Will Last Several Days.

The Frank hearing will last three or four days. The forces of the defense will be led by former Congressman William M. Howard and he will be assisted by several of the attorneys who have been connected with the case before. On account of the crowd expected, the hearing is to be held in the Senate Chamber.

Now that the Georgia courts have been upheld by the Supreme Court there has been a marked change in sentiment, and it is the general belief in Atlanta that commutation will be recommended.

The change is best shown by the Georgia petitioners for clemency, included in the list being Senator Hardwick, William Schley Howard, Congressman from this district; Hooper Alexander, United States District Attorney; Judge Powell, Judge Spencer Atkinson and M. J. Yoemens.

Also the new feeling toward the prisoner is shown in editorials calling for clemency in the Atlanta Journal and the Augusta Chronicle, which at one time bitterly opposed tactics employed by Frank's attorneys.

Appeal for Clemency.

United States District Attorney Alexander in a 25,000 word communication in which he makes an appeal for clemency as a private citizen, seeks to show by the testimony of the State's witnesses that James Conley, a negro now serving sentence as an accessory after the crime, and not Frank, was the slayer. He argues that Conley's admission that he wrote the "murder note" found beside the body raises the conclusion. The whole question, he says, "resolves inself into an inquiry as to the truth of Conley's story,' and he traces the evolution of Conley's testimony, the changes he made in it and the probable motive for each variation.

Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of Mary Phagan, forwarded to the commission tonight a letter protesting against commutation of Frank's sentence. "In this matter I have no bitterness," she declared, "but feel that the penalty the law has imposed is not too severe."

A clemency petition signed by editors of about 60 leading newspapers and magazines was received today at Gov. Slaton's office.

Letters in Frank's behalf also came today from Gov. Hanna of North Dakota, Senator Vardaman of Mississippi and Representatives Gregg of Texas and Chipperfield of Illinois.

800,000 Sign Petition to Governor for Leo M. Frank.

NEW YORK, May 29.—A petition with 800,000 signatures for the communtation of the death sentence of Leo M. Frank, was sent by the Anti-Death Penalty Committee of the Women's Peace Society to Gov. John M. Slaton of Georgia tonight.

RETAILERS SEEK MEANS OF STOPPING RETURN GOODS EVIL

Merchandise Turned Back to Stores Estimated at $3,500,000 a Year.

A committee of department store officials is investigating sales and return methods, with a view to deciding on uniform measures, to be taken by all the large stores, to stop the "return goods evil," as the merchants term the practice of returning goods unnecessarily. This practice, in its effect on the dealer and the public was described in an article published in the Post-Dispatch a year ago. The value of goods returned to St. Louis stores has been estimated at $3,500,000 a year.

Dan C. Nugent, at a meeting of the Associated Retailers at the Sunset Hill Country Club a few evenings ago, suggested these rules:

Exchanges, credits or refunds will be made when merchandise in perfect condition is returned, except as stated below:

All merchandise will be considered sold and not returnable if in the customer's possession longer than two days, unless the goods prove defective.

Articles enumerated as follows cannot be exchanged or returned: Hats, made or trimmed to order; garments altered to customer's satisfaction, shoes when buttons are reset at customer's request, or patent leather or fabric shoes that have split or cracked.

For sanitary reasons the following articles cannot be exchanged or returned: Neckwear, veilings, bedding, toothbrushes, hair ornaments, earrings.

In addition to the establishment of some such rules as the above, the retailers probably will set a definite time limit after which no goods will be returnable. A majority of the dealers favor a two-day limit, but others think a longer time preferable, and this will probably be the subject of a special recommendation by the Investigating Committee.

It was pointed out, in the merchants' discussion of this matter, that the bona fide purchaser must necessarily pay the losses entailed by the stores through the carelessness or the lax methods of those who return articles. These losses come in the wear and damage to goods, and in the expense of delivery, return collection and bookkeeping.

WARRANT FOR AGENT OF TEXAS TOWN SITE IS REFUSED

Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Wilson Declines to Hold Robert E. Kelley, Arrested Wednesday.

Robert E. Kelley of 3520 Washington avenue, a real estate promoter, who was arrested Wednesday for investigation into his business methods, was released after Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Wilson refused to issue a warrant.

Kelley, who is an agent for a land company promoting a townsite known as Figland, near Houston, Tex., denied that he had done anything wrong while conducting his agency in the three weeks he had been here. Attention was attracted by his giving lots free as an advertisement, the police said, and then charging for drawing up the deed.

Kelley said that if anyone who gained a free lot wished to have their own attorney draw up the deed they might do so, without paying him for that service.

GERMAN ESTATE HEIRS SOUGHT

Oscar and Luella Diefenbacher, if Found, to Get $8500 Each.

Mrs. Anna Anderson of 3450 Illinois avenue is trying to find her two cousins, Oscar and Luella Diefenbacher, each of whom has inherited $8500 from the estate of their uncle, Henry Diefenbacher, who died recently at Eppingen, Germany, leaving an estate of $34,000.

The estate went to the heirs of his two brothers, Phillip and Jacob, who came to St. Louis as young men. Half of it has been divided among Phillip's five children, but the two children of Jacob cannot be found. Mrs. Anderson, who was Anna Diefenbacher, said she knows nothing of her cousins except that their parents died when they were young, and that they were put in an orphan home in St. Louis. They would be between 25 and 30 years old, she said.

The body was sent to the morgue.

PARIS HEARS GREEK KING IS SUFFERING FROM DAGGER WOUND

Rumor Openly Discussed in Lobby of Chamber of Deputies and in Other Circles.

LONDON, May 29.—A Paris dispatch to the Morning Post says:

"The illness of the King of the Hellenes is the subject of several rumors in France and in the lobby of the Chamber of Deputies last night it was being openly stated that he was in reality suffering from a dagger wound.

"The same rumor was current in the course of the afternoon on the boulevards and in medical circles, where the details were published as to symptoms and treatment. They were inconsistent with the alleged cause of the King's illness."

Athens dispatches have reported that King Christantine caught a cold which developed into pleurisy and that he was operated upon, after which he rallied and at last accounts seemed to be fairly on the road to convalescence. It was announced that a specialist in Berlin who had treated him previously had been wired for and that a famous Paris surgeon was consulted by telegraph.

"YOU GET THE GIRL—WE'LL DO THE REST"

PARKWAY BENEFIT WOULD BE WORTH COST, CELLA SAYS

Largest Holder of Downtown Realty Willing to Pay His Proportion of Expense for the Central Traffic Thoroughfare, Whatever It May Be.

MOST OWNERS AND AGENTS FAVOR IT

Operators Believe Triumph of the Project June 8 Will Be the Signal for a City-Wide Revival in the Real Estate Market.

Louis A. Cella, who owns or controls through the Southern Realty Co., of which he is president, more real estate in downtown St. Louis than any other individual, expressed himself yesterday as unqualifiedly in favor of the proposed Central Traffic Parkway.

The carrying out of the project as contemplated, according to Cella, not only would distinguish, but also would reawaken the city. As an advertisement to the city he declared the project is of inestimable value.

"The parkway, or rather thoroughfare, would be on a gigantic and magnificent scale," he said, "and would attract to the city thousands of people. Where one stranger is now seen on the streets, 100 would be seen.

"While the project involves a heavy expenditure, it would be worth all it cost. Whatever that might be, I am perfectly willing to pay my proportion of it."

Among the properties in downtown St. Louis owned or controlled through 99-year leases by the Southern Realty Co., of which Cella is the dominant stockholder, are the Central National Bank building, at the northwest corner of Seventh and Olive streets; the Columbia and Strand Theater buildings, at the southwest corner of Sixth and St. Charles streets; the American Hotel and Theater building, at the northeast corner of Seventh and Market streets; the American Hotel Annex, together with the Grand Opera House, at the southeast corner of Sixth and Market streets; Havlin's Theater, at the southwest corner of Sixth and Walnut streets; the La Salle Theater, at the southeast corner of Ninth and Pine streets, and a quarter of a block at the southeast corner of Ninth and St. Charles streets.

Subject to Parkway Assessment.

All the aforementioned buildings and sites doubtless would be included in the benefit district of the proposed parkway, and as such would be subject to assessment. Whether held by it in fee or by 99-year lease the cost would devolve upon the Southern Realty Co.

"And last, but not least," continued Cella, "the proposed parkway would create a superb traffic center and an oasis in the very heart of the city.

"As a traffic way it would always meet the requirements of the city, and as an out-of-doors resort it would be a haven for the masses of the people."

Incidentally, Cella has just given out plans for the erection, at the southeast corner of Ninth and St. Charles streets, of a playhouse to cost $1,000,000.

Charles E. Trembley two weeks ago approved the Parkway plan at the annual banquet of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange. President Trembley said, however, that he hopes the Circuit Court would not be disposed to restrict the benefit district, thus compelling the adjoining property owners to bear the burden of the cost, but would make it so comprehensive that the city at large would bear its quota of the outlay.

Agents and Owners Favor Project.

The majority of the real estate agents, as well as the property owners, are working for the success of the project, the consummation of which, it is believed, would make an epoch in the growth of the city.

The only active opponents of the project, according to champions of the Parkway, are a few downtown landlords. These include Martin Shaughnessy, J. C. Crowdus, Adam Wackman and Isaac H. Lionberger. With the exception of Wackmann, all have extensive real estate holdings on Pine, Olive and Locust streets and on Washington avenues, and are believed to be apprehensive of heavy assessment, or of an adverse effect upon those thoroughfares, along which they have material interests.

The consensus of opinion in realty circles is that the proposed Parkway would strengthen those thoroughfares, especially in the section east of Jefferson avenue.

The triumph of the Parkway, according to operators, would be the signal for a city-wide revival in the realty market. The launching of several large building plans, it is said, is only awaiting the ratification of the Parkway project on June 8.

Twelfth Street Corners.

Recently offers have been reported for Twelfth street corners between Olive and Market streets, which will be desirable as hotel sites with the construction of the Parkway.

The southeast corner of Twelfth and Chestnut streets is owned by Leo Moser and the northeast corner of Twelfth and Pine streets is owned by the Davis estate. Both owners have resources to erect buildings in keeping with the importance of the locations.

Man and Wife Held Up on Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Bardol Brnaz of 2725A Hickory street were held up by two negro highwaymen at 9:15 o'clock last night when walking on California avenue, between Hickory and La Salle streets. One negro pointed a revolver at Brnaz, while the other took $1.75 from his pockets. The highwaymen then ran.

JACKSON JOHNSON BUYS M'MILLAN HOME FOR $125,000

Residence of Late C. C. Spink Sold to Edward G. Rolwing for $30,000.

Sales of residences ranging in price from $15,000 to $130,000 formed the feature of the closing week of the month in the St. Louis realty market. The most notable sale was that in which Jackson Johnson of the Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. and president of the International Shoe Co., bought the residence of the late William McMillan at 25 Portland place. The price paid, it is understood, was $125,000.

The sale, as was announced in the Post-Dispatch, was arranged three months ago, but was delayed in its consummation because the deed had to be sent to Europe for execution by Capt. William Northrup McMillan. The house, one of the most sumptuous in the West End, will be gone over at a cost of $25,000. The exterior, as well as the interior, will undergo changes.

Spink Home Sells for $30,000.

Another sale was that of the residence of the late Charles C. Spink at 5235 Lindell terrace, which was bought by Edward G. Rolwing, for $30,000. The sale was made by the Mercantile Trust Co., which has led the market in the sale of residential property this spring. The Spink house is a three-story red brick, with front, side and sleeping porches. The lot has a frontage on Lindell terrace and of Forest Park of 100 feet.

There have been many offers for the James How home at 5115 Lindell boulevard. The house, one of the most imposing in the city, is held at $60,000, according to Cornet & Zeibig, the agents. Offers have been made for it ranging from $40,000 to $50,000. Indications are that this house soon will be off the market.

A sale in Hillcrest was that of 79 Arundel place to Ralph R. Doak, St. Louis manager of the St. Louis Electric Vehicle Co. This house, built by Leigh Bros., is of seven rooms and in English cottage style. The first story is in red Marsh brick.

Demand at Hillcrest.

There has been an active demand this spring for houses in Hillcrest, which is being built up on a most attractive scale. The subdivision is on the west side of Skinker road and is one of the best situated of the high-class subdivisions in the city.

A 12-room house at 5057 Waterman avenue owned by the Tacoma Realty Co., was purchased by Michael J. Mulvihill, a former Democratic Committeeman. The sale was made by Ernest Edwards of Cornet & Zeibig, in connection with the Holbrook-Blackwelder Real Estate Trust Co.

There were many other sales of high-class residence properties. They will be made public when they are placed on record.

TWO ADDITIONAL HOMES TO BE BUILT IN SOUTHMOOR AT ONCE

Plans for Them Call for Italian Colonial Type as Applied to Country Residences.

Plans have been completed for the erection of two more houses in Southmoor in St. Louis County, thus making four houses started in the suburb since it was placed on the market last fall.

Roy P. Atwood purchased lot 15. His home will be a version of the Italian colonial type as applied to a country residence. The house is to be of a low, rambling type, surmounted by a low pitched roof with wide spreading eaves. The walls are of Matt brick, with groups of bays and windows, a feature being that all windows extend to the floor and open on a tile-paved terrace which extends across the entire front of the house.

Lot 9 was bought by Charles P. van Graafeiland. It is so situated on the slope of an elevation that the garage is to be in the basement. Entrance to the house will be on the side and open onto a drive, with a portico supported by columns. The garden front faces the street and contains a large terrace, on which all windows open.

Arthur W. Rehfeldt, secretary of the Southmoor Realty Co., handled both these transactions.

SPECIAL SALE OF PROPERTY IN NORTH PARKVIEW ON

Bungalows and Lots Being Offered on Easy Terms by Improvement Co.

The Delmar Improvement Co. is holding a special sale of bungalows and of lots in North Parkview. The bungalows vary in size and are modern and attractive. Both the bungalows and lots are being offered at special prices and easy terms. Several new houses also are on sale. North Parkview, which was placed on the market about two years ago, is being rapidly built up with high-class bungalows, houses and apartments. The subdivision, formerly the Delmar Racetrack, lies on the north side of Delmar and is just west of Skinker road. The Delmar cars pass the property.

30 MORE ROOMS RENTED IN RAILWAY EXCHANGE BUILDING

Thirty more rooms have been rented in the Railway Exchange Building since April 1, according to Claude B. Ricketts, the building manager. A number of the lessees, Ricketts states, are out-of-town concerns which are establishing branches in St. Louis. The lessee of the last week are: R. J. Farmsworth, advertising; Adam E. Fisher, patent attorney; C. E. Smith, formerly chief engineer of the Missouri Pacific railroad; the International Time Recording Co. of New York, and William L. Posey, accountant; the Tabulating Machine Co. has taken additional rooms, while the All Steel Motor Co. has doubled its space.

EIGHT DOUBLE FLATS BEING ERECTED ON SHAW AVENUE

They Represent an Investment of $100,000; Heat and Janitor Service to Be Furnished.

With the approach of the completion of the Tower Grove viaduct, considerable building activity is noticeable in the vicinity of Tower Grove avenue and the Shaw tract. On the north side of Shaw avenue eight double flats, representing an investment of more than $100,000, are under construction. Three of these four-family apartments, which will be known as 4151-53-55,-57-59-61 Shaw avenue, are being built by the Girard Realty and Building Co., of which Walter J. Hummelsheim is president. Each building has a lot of 50 feet by 176 feet 5 inches, with a space of eight feet between the buildings, insuring good light and ventilation.

An innovation in this class of buildings will be that heat and janitor service will be furnished. The heating system will be so arranged that if necessary four plants can be installed at small additional cost.

Each suite of apartments will contain four large rooms, sun parlor in front and screened sleeping porch in the rear. There will be a collonade entrance between the sun room and living room, the latter being finished in fumed oak, having large brick mantels, with bookcases on each side. The front of the building will be of mat brick construction, with tile and terra cotta pointing. The roofs will have tiled mansards. The apartments will be ready for occupancy about Aug. 15.

Loans for the three buildings were negotiated by the Borders Realty Co., who will have the management of the buildings when completed.

REALTY FIRM TO ERECT OFFICE BUILDING ON CHESTNUT STREET

Three-Story Structure at Eighth Will Cost $50,000.

The Oreon E. & R. G. Scott Real Estate Co. has completed plans for the erection at the southwest corner of Eighth and Chestnut streets of a modern three-story building. The old two-story buildings now occupying the site are now being torn down.

The building will have a finished basement and will cost about $50,000. It will be built of glossy white enameled terra cotta, with an abundance of plate glass and is designed in the Italian Renaissance style of architecture.

The second floor will be subdivided into offices of generous proportions, while the third floor will not be subdivided.

The Scott company will occupy the corner office of the first floor, and this and the other three first-floor offices will be finished in quartered oak and the furnishings and fittings throughout the first floor will be of Italian marble, quartered oak and white tile.

The plans for the building were drawn by Albert B. Groves, architect, under whose supervision it is being erected.

Poultry Problems Solved

Incubating Goose Eggs With a Hen.

I should like to know how to hatch and raise geese with hens.—Subscriber, St. L.

This is entirely feasible. Of course the hens cannot cover many eggs. You can tell how many eggs a hen can cover thoroughly. Large hens like the Brahma or Cochin are good for incubating goose eggs. A hen will cover from three to five goose eggs ordinarily, depending upon the size. Goose eggs appear to demand more moisture than hen eggs and should be sprinkled with water daily if you use hens, especially during the latter period of incubation. Otherwise the goslings may have great difficulty in getting out of the eggs. Ordinarily it takes goose eggs 28 or 29 days to hatch; sometimes longer than that. They are likely to hatch unevenly. Those that are first hatched can be taken in the house, put in a basket, covered and kept in a warm place. Do not feed the goslings until they have been out of the shell one or two days. Feed four times a day until they are two weeks old. At first I should give nothing but stale bread crumbled fine, then a little later mix with a little corn meal and bran. Moisten the whole very slightly. Goslings should not be fed sloppy food. Another good feed is one-third each of corn meal, middlings and bran baked; add a little fine grit to the mixture. Do not bake it until it is crisp. Goslings must have plenty of water, but if they are with hens, keep them away from the swimming pool until they get their second feathers. At first they can be confined to a small run. The hen doesn't lead the goslings. The goslinngs lead and the hen follows around. They look out for themselves except they want the hen to get them warm occasionally. They should have access to plenty of grass and the grass should, if possible, be short and tender. Of course after the goslings get large enough to leave the hen they shift for themselves. If there is abundant grass they will live on that alone. Geese are as profitable as any other kind of poultry and are freer from disease than any other kind of poultry.

Internal Injury.

Will you kindly tell me what is the trouble with one of my hens? She is a year old and started to lay four months ago. She looks healthy, but is unable to get on the roost and off the roost without help. She twists her neck around as though something was the matter with it. Sometimes when I help her on the roost she falls off. She appears to be crippled.—W. G. S., St. Louis.

I cannot say what is the trouble without seeing this bird, and perhaps I couldn't tell then. I imagine it is some sort of internal injury. It may be some disease in the usual sense, but I think it more likely to be an injury. In other words, she is crippled internally, I imagine. It may be an injury to the egg organs or some vital organ. I imagine nothing can be done for her. You don't have to put her on the roost. I should not do it as she is now. Put her by herself and let her alone for awhile. She may be all right under that treatment.

NEWS AND FEATURES OF THE POULTRY WORLD

NEGLECT OR ABUSE OF YOUNG TURKEYS MAY PROVE FATAL

Special Precautions for Hatching and Early Feeding Are Strongly Essential.

This is the time of year that turkey hens usually show restlessness and a desire to wander to out-of-the-way places, looking for a place to sit and hatch. If enough eggs have been saved it will be well to let one or more of them start to hatching, as the season is so far advanced that settled weather may reasonably be expected. It is a good plan to set some chicken hens on turkey eggs at the same time, then turn all the poults over to the turkeys.

Turkey hens will cover from 15 to 18 eggs, but an average-sized chicken should not have more than 10. A barrel laid on its side, with short straw or hay for nesting material and some brush thrown over and about it, to protect it from intrusion, makes a good place for the turkey to do her hatching. The place a turkey likes best for her long siege is a quiet, sheltered nook, where she may hatch without interference from man or animal. While the eggs are accumulating, before starting the hatch they should be kept in a cool, dry place away from strong light. They should be turned every day until placed under the hens.

Newly hatched turkeys are very delicate and will stand very little neglect or abuse. They must not be coddled, and they should never be let out in the morning, or at any other time when the grass is damp or wet. Chilling also should be guarded against. They need no food for at least 24 hours, as nature provides for their wants along this line during that period in the yolk of the egg. A good feed for the first few days is hard-boiled eggs crumbled fine. Then dry bread soaked in milk and squeezed dry makes a good feed. Rolled oats and clabbered milk, dried and crumbled, also are good at this time. Then may follow cracked grains to supplement the feed they will pick up on free range.

If the season is far enough advanced the mother and poults should be put in a pen away from the rest of the poultry and all other stock. Wide boards set up on edge in the form of a square in the orchard and with the mother in a slatted coop or tied by one leg makes a good place for them for several days at the beginning. This will give the young turkeys a chance to do a little ranging while getting strong enough to move about over larger areas later on. There is, nevertheless, danger in allowing them too much freedom. They should be kept in sight of the house and by feeding them a little every day, late in the afternoon, they will learn to come back home, where a roosting place should be provided for them, out of reach of night prowlers. In feeding young turkeys be careful not to give them too much.

One of the worst enemies of young turkeys is the large gray-head louse. These pests attack the birds at a very early age and it does not take many of them, if left unmolested, to kill a poult in a short time. To prevent this the poults should be examined at an early age. If there are any lice they will be found on top of the head and under the wings. Dusting with insect powder is a good repellant, or, if the weather is mild and warm, a little lard may be rubbed on the head, under the wings and on the legs. The dusting should be continued every week or 10 days until the birds are about eight weeks old.

Simple, Home Remedy That Cures Sorehead.

A home remedy for sorehead, recommended to be effective, came to the poultry editor from a woman poultry raiser in Oklahoma. Her directions for the use of this remedy follow:

"An epidemic of sorehead broke out among my chickens four years ago, and I used a treatment that has never failed me up to the present. I filled a gallon bucket with milk warm water up to an inch of the top and into this put three tablespoonsful of kerosene. I took the sick birds by the feet and quickly dipped their heads and necks down into the water. If you try this and the first treatment does not cure, then repeat it in two or three days, and you will have no more sorehead in the flock. It is best to dip the fowls in the evening, so they will have the night in the house, thus avoiding colds."

There have been more or less inquiries from Post-Dispatch readers for a good cure for this ailment, and we advise all those who have this trouble in their flocks to try this treatment. While we have not had the opportunity to test it out ourselves, it no doubt will do all that is claimed for it. It is reasonable to suppose this, as the trouble is caused by an organism which probably is readily killed by the kerosene.

POULTRY SUCCESS
Lee's Lice Killer and Germozone are essentials to success with poultry. The former is simply sprayed or painted on roosts and kills all insects there as well as lice on the bodies of the chickens roosting over it, scaley leg mites, etc. No handling, dusting, dipping or greasing. Germozone is given in the drinking water. It purifies the water and vessels. It prevents contagion from one to the others. Is counteracts musty or spoiled food. It prevents and relieves bowel trouble. It is a ready remedy for roup, colds, swelled head, canker or skin disease.
Conveniently obtainable at most every city or town.

SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH'S REVIEW OF MARKET CONDITIONS

DIPLOMATIC OUTLOOK IS A RESTRAINT ON SPECULATION IN THE NEW YORK MARKET

Traders Not Inclined to Buy Heavily Before Germany's Note Is Received.

WEEK'S RANGE IS LOWER

Bethlehem Steel Scores a Loss of Over 7 Points; Rails Drop 2 to 3.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted financial review today, says:

"It was possible to ascribe the quiet movement of this week's stock market, on a basis of underlying firmness, to a consensus of financial judgment that Germany's reply to our Government would be satisfactory. It was also possible to explain it by the general feeling that even a breach of diplomatic relations could not very well go further than the recall of the respective Ambassadors. But the really impressive aspect of the matter was the fact that the action of the financial markets, both before and during the interval of suspense over Berlin's answer, had been exactly what there was reason to have expected, had there been no Lusitania episode and no clash with Germany.

"Nearly a week before the fateful 7th of May the position on the Stock Exchange was recognized by all experienced watchers as wholly insecure. It is not going too far to say that precisely such a break in prices as occurred in the few days after the Lusitania news, precisely such partial recovery as ensued, and precisely such subsequent lapse into inactivity, would in all probability have made up the sequence of events, whatever the outside news had been.

Market Position Sound.

"When an unstable structure of speculation is ready to topple over there will never be lacking some incident to give the decisive push. The really remarkable thing about the recent speculative readjustment is that news of such overwhelming horror as the exploit of the German submarine, with resultant possibilities of so formidable a character, should have produced no greater effect on the financial markets than would have been produced by a wholly ordinary surprise or disappointment in the market's own affairs.

"We still have to await the further developments in our controversy with Berlin. But in the meantime the one conclusion to which the attitude of the Stock Exchange forces the mind is the conclusion that the country's financial position is immensely strong, and is most unlikely to be shaken, even by the most unpleasant developments in the diplomatic field.

"The two most positive of all witnesses to confidence in the outlook—tangible signs of trade revival in the midst of the tension with Berlin, the simultaneous movement of all foreign exchange rates heavily in our favor and the steady inflow of gold at a time when our markets are making no bid whatever for it—unite in pointing to a very unusual situation, and one which certainly explains the absence of misgiving in the financial community.

Europe Will Pay Debts.

"Irrespective of any foreign complication of our own, the longer outcome of the economic forces, now at work, thus powerfully in favor of this country, is perplexing in a high degree. It has even led among some of Wall street's more impulsive reasoners to a haphazard theory that financial Europe will be unable to pay its accumulating debts to the United States, that something vaguely described as 'repudiation' will result, and that manufacturers, now at work on Europe's orders for supplies will be accordingly out of pocket.

"Of all the possibilities, this makes the least appeal to the intelligent mind. Even this does not happen after such a fashion, either in the political or in the business world. Even a Balkan State, resuming war at a moment of exhaustion from a war just ended, does not dream of annihilating its credit and buying power through defaulting on previous engagements.

"The truth of the present puzzling situation undoubtedly is, that the market for international exchange is passing through a period so peculiar, and governed by influences so entirely new to economic history, that the world has to take time in adjusting itself to the situation. But the same statement could have been made, and was made, regarding the situation created when the war broke out, and when England, for the moment started to call in what was owed to her citizens throughout the world.

Problems Will Work Out.

"The solution of that dilemma, in which our own market occupied exactly the position occupied by Europe now, was beyond the grasp of anyone. Prediction last August or September of the state of affairs which now visibly exists on the international markets would have been received with outright derision. Yet, as we can see today, every one of the elements which have combined to create the existing status was in sight eight months ago.

"When the present greatly abnormal derangement of the market for international exchange, in the opposite direction, has been dealt with along the lines which economic history follows almost automatically, we shall no doubt be making the same comment, and wondering why we had not discovered, at the end of May, 1915, the obvious means by which the difficulty was to be solved.

"It will necessarily be solved, however, in a way which will powerfully contribute, first to the tangible capital resources of the United States, next to the solidity of our own investments, and finally to the reaffirming, for a much longer period than we had imagined even three or four months ago, of our economic leadership in the financial world.

"Stock prices closed the week 1 to 7½ points under the previous week's closing. Yesterday's market was quiet and steady."

LONDON BANKS MAY PLACE BIG CREDIT IN N. Y.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and the New York World.

LONDON, May 29.—Financial London recognizes that Italy's entry into the arena on the side of the allies is a most important factor. But we also recognize that with each further nation which joins the conflict, a proportionately great destruction of the world's stock of capital is involved.

This is one reason why we hope that the United States will not be drawn in. Your material advantages, if war can be avoided, are so enormous that even an excess of caution on your part might well be pardoned. The greatest benefits which your country can confer on humanity now are through exercise of industrial and financial rather than military power, and through your moral support of the laws of civilization.

In well-posted circles here it has been believed that Germany was not disinclined to pick a quarrel, and that her Government's reply to Mr. Wilson would be unconciliatory. If your country's exports to the allies could be stopped as a consequence of a diplomatic rupture with Berlin—which it seems to be thought might happen in case of panicky conditions following a breach—the purposes of the German Government would be achieved.

Credits a Question.

So far as is known, our Government's chief objection to the establishment of a large British credit at New York is twofold. It is doubted, first, whether your market would be prepared to absorb, say £100,000,000 in one, two and three year bonds.

On the other hand, the placing of a smaller credit at high terms might easily prejudice the success of Government loans here. Our public would hardly appreciate the fact that the relatively unfavorable rates would be offset by the advantage gained by our own Government in saving losses on exchange.

The French Government credit for £60,000,000 now being established on this market is entirely reserved for purposes of financing indebtedness to America. Since the operation has no effect upon French exchange on London, the recent decline in American securities is attributed solely to your fears of war. English investors are unlikely to sell except upon an appreciable rise.

BEEF STEERS UP, WHILE SHEEP ARE IN SHARP DECLINE

Local Livestock Market Is Slightly Irregular on the Week's Trading.

RECEIPTS AT NATIONAL STOCKYARDS.

	Last week.	Previous week.	Year ago.
Cattle	12,659	14,497	17,786
Hogs	46,956	53,600	52,623
Sheep	18,488	14,028	24,859
Horses, mules	5,128	5,997	1,995

Cattle receipts last week were just moderate and were lighter than those of last year. However, there was a considerably better run of Southerns and had native receipts held up there would have been a nice increase. Beef steer supply was moderate and quality good.

One of the chief characteristics of last week's steer trade was the good demand for choice beeves. The bulk of best steers closed 15@25c higher. There was a comfortable advance in yearlings up to the middle of the week, when supply of these kinds became excessive and all of the early advance was eliminated. The week's top on steers was $9 and a good showing sold at $8.50 to $8.90. These were mostly heavy steers.

Trade in butcher cattle last week was strong and active at all times. A moderate supply of heifers was on sale and there was a large proportion of choice to prime kinds. These classes were in especially good demand and registered an advance of 15@25c. Two loads of prime heifers sold at $9.15, extreme top for the week, and the largest string at the price ever sold.

A moderate supply of cows was on sale and there was a good demand for all classes, with the result that they sold steady and active all during the week. Best cows sold up to $7.25. Bulls were also in light supply, but medium grade bulls were not wanted and were mostly 10@15c lower. Best kinds were steady.

Prices on vealers were on the upturn all during the week. A fair supply was available, and a large proportion of prime grades was included. They changed hands at a 75c advance, with a top of $9.75.

Trade in stockers and feeders was on a quiet basis last week. Fresh receipts were moderate, but country demand very light and movement slow. Bulk of sales were anywhere from steady to 10@15c lower.

Southern Cattle Receipts Large.

The best week's run of Southern cattle of the year arrived last week. This was due to seasonable supplies from Texas, and now that the grass steer movement has begun it is logical to expect better runs in the Southern division. There was an excessive suply of Texas steers on sale last week and good to choice fed and grass steers declined 15c, good kinds 15@25c, while medium and common grassers and fed steers were 25@40c lower. A load of south Texas grass steers topepd for the week at $8.65. This price was also a new record and the highest ever known for Texas grass steers.

The supply of hogs was just fair, as the total for the week is but in the neighborhood of 45,000 head, or less than an average of 8000 per day, which is much too small for the needs of the market. At the opening of the week prices took a sharp tumble, but there was a reaction and later values reached the highest basis of the year.

On Monday the top was $7.65 and the bulk of the hogs went at $7.50@6.60, while on Friday the top was up to $8 and the bulk of desirable hogs went at $7.80@7.95. Packers were good buyers all the week and purchased a good proportion of the offerings, paying prices fully as high as those being paid by the shippers or butchers.

Good quality hogs from 175 to 272 pounds were selling at the top of the market. The range of prices was not very wide as very few hogs sold 25c under the top of the market. Rough packers went at $7.00@7.25 as a rule. Best lights under 165 pounds sold at $7.60@7.85; fair grades, $7.25@7.50; best pigs, that did not weigh more than 125 pounds, sold at $7.10@7.65; fair grades, $6.35@7.00; and the poorer grades, $5.50@6.25, according to values.

Sheep Market Is Lower.

The supply was better of both sheep and lambs last week than any week so far this year, but at that it was but a moderate number that was received. However, prices took a tumble. The week opened on a better basis than the close of the previous week, but it suddenly started downward, and it went at a rapid rate, so that at the close of the week most kinds were much lower.

Best lambs suffered to the extent of 75c and others more, while sheep and bucks lost $1.50, with heavy ewes showing a still greater loss than this. Early in the week clipped lambs sold at $10.25, a price never before reached on this market, while spring lambs sold as high as $12.25, which is also the highest for this late in the season.

At the close of the week best clipped lambs were selling at $9.50, spring lambs $11.50, mutton sheep $5.50, heavy ewes $5, bucks $4.50, choppers $4@4.75, canners and stockers $2@3.75 and bucks $4.50.

Receipts of horses and mules were on a fairly liberal order, but not as heavy as the previous week. Trade in the auction was conducted along much the same lines as it has been. Eastern purchasers were the aggressors all through and sales of good big chunks and drafters were the ones most commonly seen. Prices ranged about steady. Southerners were slow buyers and they took very light supplies. War horses sold best. There were but two inspections held throughout the week, but beginning with Monday the Belgians will begin to fill their new contract and this will mean additional life to the market.

WEATHER MAP FAVORABLE FOR COTTON CROP

Week's Developments Slightly Favor the Bears; Government Report Next Tuesday.

The first Government report of the season will be issued Tuesday and will show the condition of cotton under date of May 25, 1915. Private estimates, made in an attempt to forecast the Government report, are in the main uniform, around 80 per cent. These private estimates are valuable chiefly because they show the expectation of the trade, and the steadiness of prices around the present level would indicate that a prospect of 80 per cent condition has been discounted. Any deviation from this expectation will affect the market, but conditions of immediate supply and demand and the many present influences of this unusual season may offset an unexpected report by the Government. The market is quiet, therefore, and free from the sudden fluctuations that we have seen so often just before a report.

Weather Is Favorable.

The Weather Bulletin, covering the week ending May 25, says: "Warm weather prevailed and but little rain occurred in the cotton belt during the week, except in Oklahoma and portions of the adjoining states, where the rainfall was generally heavy. However, the soil in those portions of the belt where little rain occurred is, in most cases, supplied with sufficient moisture for present needs, and no harmful effects were produced except locally in Mississippi and Southern Texas, where the late planted needs more moisture for satisfactory germination, and in Louisiana, where the crop is suffering from lack of rain. In Oklahoma and portions of Arkansas the soil was too wet for cultivation and the crop is becoming grassy, but in all other portions of the belt the early planted is up to a good stand and well cultivated."

This weather report gives fully the conditions and the needs on the 25th. Since that date heavy rains have fallen over the entire cotton belt except in North Carolina and in Texas, where scattered showers have been the rule. In Oklahoma and in Arkansas these rains were not needed, but were welcome in Mississippi and in Louisiana. They did no harm in Alabama and Georgia and the prospect of clearing weather in the cotton belt leaves all that could be desired so far as weather is concerned. The heavy rains above and local along the river may cause some damage on account of high water, but it will probably be very little.

War Scare Not Disturbing.

The possibility of this country being involved in war seems to disturb the market very little. Shipping goes on at a great rate. Last week there were exported 160,387 bales, compared with 92,722 for the same week last year. The total for the season up to May 28, inclusive, was 7,794,621 bales, compared with 8,562,841 bales for the same period last season. Port stocks were 1,075,948 bales, about twice the stock at the same time last season. Port receipts are heavier than in previous years, but light enough to allow a heavy decline in port stocks, the decrease being over 100,000 bales. The present rate of export would, in the remaining nine weeks, carry the total above last season's total.

The stock of cotton in Liverpool is 1,708,000 bales, of which 1,419,000 are American. This is a large stock, but exports to Liverpool last week were 120,000 bales. They seem willing to take the cotton. Forwardings for the week were 62,000 bales, of which 53,000 were American. The forwardings were not small when the holidays are taken into consideration, and the week treated as but two-thirds of a working week. The only trouble in England seems to be the inclination of their mill operatives to take things easy and not turn out the goods in sufficient quantities to satisfy the needs of that country.

Demand Is Broad.

What the armies of the world will consume is an interesting problem. The destruction of clothes, tents, automobiles and the need for bandages, absorbent cotton and cotton for explosives, all taken together create a demand that is hard to measure. Much of the stock at ports and in interior markets is already committed, and will find its way to domestic or foreign mills. While opinion seems changing to the belief that the war will be a long one the trading in the future markets apparently runs on the distant months so far as may be read from prices.

Fall and winter months maintain a substantial premium over the nearby positions. For a time this premium was accounted for by the belief that the war would be over before fall, and business would go on uninterrupted. This would indicate a general idea that the continuance of the war would insure present values. The premium is, however, no more than carrying charges would justify.

The domestic mills are enjoying a good business. It is said that retailers' stocks are not large and they will have to buy steadily. The spinners are finding that yarn buyers are inclined to hold off and ask concessions in price, but the cloth manufacturers are able to maintain prices and are cheerful over the outlook. Sales in the spot cotton markets have been comparatively large and prices fairly steady. The demand is not regular and it may be borne in mind that it never is at this season of the year, and it is encouraging to owners of cotton to know that there is even a fair demand now, after 14,500,000 bales of cotton have come into sight, and it is well known that there are about 2,225,000 bales yet to come.

Liquidation in May wheat disturbed all speculative grain markets last week. On the Merchants' Exchange the option expired yesterday at $1.41 after being offered down 5c from the opening last Monday, while in Chicago the price touched $1.37½ and closed at $1.39, compared with $1.55 last Monday. At the crest of the war rise on Feb. 5, May wheat in Chicago sold at $1.67, and in St. Louis at $1.62⅜. Last July the quotations averaged about 85 cents.

Lack of export demand, following the sinking of the Lusitania, which made foreign buyers go elsewhere for supplies, even when paying higher prices, owing to more safety in shipping, was the direct cause of the break, although the speculative fraternity overbought the market on expectations of a decided shortage in wheat on the end of the old crop year, and when the 11-hour bulls tried to market their holdings there was no buying in sight except cash houses, which only took the offerings at every severe concession in price.

Wet Weather Helps Crop.

Wet weather over the domestic winter wheat belt also operated against the bulls, as with temperatures low there was little talk of bug damage, and the wheat belt has had sufficient moisture to carry the crop close to maturity. Spring wheat conditions were ideal for early development of the crop, as was true of the wheat fields in Canada, and chances favor a big yield in the domestic Northwest and in the Dominion.

Aside from these factors the first car of new wheat left Texas on Thursday for shipment to Kansas City, indicating an unusually early movement of the crop. Official railroad calls for 18,000 men for harvest in Oklahoma by June 8, also depressed sentiment, as some of the recent crop damage stories sent in by so-called experts from that State were rather alarming.

That the experts are less sure of their position was shown yesterday when B. W. Snow, who is considered one of the most reliable crop authorities, seemed to hedge on recent excessive damage reports and sent in the following:

"During the past 10 days I have visited all districts where my survey last fall showed serious presence of Hessian fly. It is present over a wide field, reaching from the western counties of Ohio to those of West Central Kansas. More than half the counties of Indiana, the southern third of Illinois, practically all of Missouri, the east half of Kansas, northern counties of Oklahoma and southern counties of Nebraska are more or less involved. In localities the loss is severe, reaching to total over small areas and severe in many, but as a rule the damage is local in character and good fields are found with the bad.

"Broadly speaking, Missouri is the only State showing a general and statewide loss, though considerable districts in Indiana, Illinois and Kansas show serious damage. In spite of the fact that there has been some damaging excess of rainfall this spring in part of the Southwest, accompanied in Kansas and Oklahoma by an attack of red rust, the general condition of the crop is vigorous and this situation over the whole winter wheat breadth must be kept in mind while the local fly damage is being considered.

"My county agents are now sending me local reports of conditions over the whole area and a definite general report will be made shortly and until that time it is impossible to undertake any definite statement of the crop prospect as a whole."

Corn futures failed to reflect the decline in wheat and were relatively firm on the week's speculation. The unusual rains in Iowa and other corn states were against the new crop, while receipts were light owing to bad roads. It will probably be found, however, that the damage from water has been exaggerated, and later the present rain will stand the crop in good stead. Oats were irregular to lower on favorable crop reports and slack cash demands.

WOMAN SAYS SHE WAS DRUGGED

Tells Police Strange Man Enticed Her to a Room.

Mrs. Anna Motley, 25 years old, a domestic, living at 223 Benton terrace, was taken to the city hospital Friday night by an attache of the Y. W. C. A. She was suffering from a severe nervous shock. She told the police that while seeking employment she met a man Monday at Fifteenth and Pine streets.

He took her to a house at 1411½ Olive street, under the pretext of giving her work, she said. She drank a glass of water and became unconscious, in which state she remained until the following morning. She then went to the Y. W. C. A. and stayed there until Friday night, when it was learned she required hospital treatment. She said she was separated from her husband.

COLUMBIAN CLUB STARTS AN INQUIRY INTO CRAPS GAME

All Members Who Took Part Likely to Be Severely Disciplined, It Is Said.

STATEMENT IS ISSUED

It Points Out That Dice Row Was at Private Function, Not Club Affair.

The management of the Columbian Club, the leading Jewish social organization of St. Louis, yesterday authorized a searching investigation of the exciting occurrences in the club house a week ago last night, when a big craps game broke u pin a row and Morton Moss, wiring superintendent for the Kinloch Telephone Co., was accused of introducing duplicate dice into the game.

A high official of the club told a Post-Dispatch reporter that the inquiry will not be confined to the alleged unsportsmanlike conduct of Moss, but that it is likely that all members who took part in the game in violation of the club rules will be severely disciplined. Under strict interpretation of the rules a member might be expelled for gambling.

Wallace Renard, vice president of the club, who is acting as president in the absence of A. C. Einstein, gave out the following statement yesterday afternoon:

"The officers of the Columbian Club, in the absence of a meeting of the Board of Directors, have informally discussed among themselves the publicity given by the papers of an incident recently transpiring within the club quarters.

Wasn't a Club Function.

"The manner in which the incident has been published has created the inference in the minds of many that it transpired at a club function, or at least that it was an incident that took place with the consent of the Board of Managers.

"The inference has also been drawn that the incident was one such as ordinarily transpires at the club. This is entirely incorrect.

"It is due to the members of the club to state that such incidents as that referred to are never tolerated, and if the same take place, they take place in direct violation of the club's rules and policies. The facts regarding the matter, as far as the club is concerned, are as follows:

"The club rents its banquet room to members, in the event they desire to give private banquets, or dinner parties. At club affairs, none other than club members are permitted, but where the club's banquet room is rented to a member for a private function, persons who are not members of the club may be invited, and the club has no supervision over the personnel of those who attend such private functions.

Nonmembers Were Invited.

"On this particular occasion the quarters had been rented to gentlemen who desired to give a private banquet and entertainment in honor of one of their friends, and invited to this function such persons as they chose. The club had absolutely no knowledge of who the guests would be, and a very large proportion, if not the greater portion, of the gentlemen who were invited to the function were not members of the Columbian Club.

"The game which was played on this occasion was participated in by persons who were not members of the club and had the carrying on of such a game been known at the time to the officers charged with the management of the club, the same would have been immediately stopped.

Far From Club's Policy.

"The Columbian Club has been in existence some twenty years, has a commodious clubhouse, in a prominent part of the city; has a large membership, who are accustomed constantly to use the club for club affairs, which are participated in by such members, their wives and their families, and nothing has been further from the policy of the club than to permit such incidents as that referred to.

"It is particularly unfortunate that any notoriety should be inflicted on this larger membership because of this violation of the rules by individuals, members and nonmembers, who participated in the hospitality accorded them, in being permitted to attend a function within the club's quarters."

Renard said the action to be taken by the club management could not be forecast at this time, but that he felt sure the investigation would have results which would prevent a repetition of the present scandal growing out of a gambling game.

Police Report Made.

Police Capt. Hess yesterday reported to Chief Young that he had investigated the published reports of the occurrence at the club and had learned there was a gambling game there in which one of the players was accused of using duplicate dice.

None of the players was willing to accompany special policeman to the Circuit Attorney's or the Prosecuting Attorney's office and no subpenas thus far have been issued for witnesses.

Assistant Circuit Attorneys Baer and Thomas said that any complaint as to gambling at the club must be made to the Prosecuting Attorney, as the offense is not a felony.

Prosecuting Attorney Sidener told the policemen he would issue warrants if they would bring witnesses, but that he had no power to issue summonses.

Baer and Thomas said a charge of larceny by fraud sometimes is based on the misuse of dice, but it is practically impossible to induce a grand jury to return an indictment on that charge, because the witnesses necessarily must admit that they themselves were gambling in violation of the law.

WIFE FAILS TO SUPPORT MAN AND HE WINS DIVORCE SUIT

Denver Woman Was to Look After Him Until He Completed Medical Course.

DENVER, Colo., May 29.—That Mrs. Jennie Shachet's failure to keep an agreement by which she bound herself to support her husband while he was attending the University of Colorado constituted cruelty, was the finding of a jury in Judge Wright's court today. As a result of the jury's verdict Shachet will receive a divorce if a motion for a new trial is not successful.

Mrs. Shachet sued for separate maintenance, charging that her husband had not contributed toward her support and had renounced her, while Shachet, in a cross-complaint, asked for a divorce. Trial of the case developed that before their marriage Shachet and the young woman agreed not to live together until after he had completed his medical education, Mrs. Shachet to support him until he had received his diploma.

The evidence showed that Mrs. Shachet, in compliance with the agreement, had given her husband all her savings and kept him in college for a considerable length of time, until all her resources had been exhausted. The couple quarreled and the court proceedings were the result.

The DOCTOR'S ADVICE

by Dr. Lewis Baker

The questions answered below are general in character, the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers will apply in any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Bldg., College-Ellwood Sts., Daytou, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Full name and address must be given, but only initials or fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

"Bessie" asks: "How may I make my hair grow long and thick? I have dandruff and my scalp itches terribly."

Answer: As long as you have dandruff you may not expect beautiful hair. Use plain yellow minyol to overcome the itching and dandruff and put the scalp in good healthful condition. Clip the ends of the hair and a vigorous growth of hair should ensue. Minyol is perfectly harmless.

"Chubby" writes: "I'm much too stout. My friends call me 'Chubby,' and I want to reduce. Have tried exercises, but they only increase my weight."

Answer: Arbolone tablets should reduce your weight as much as you would like to lose. They are harmless and extensively used by those obesely inclined to keep down excessive weight.

"Young Man" writes: "I have just reached the age of 21. Have grown up quickly and weigh 165 pounds, but I'm not strong like other fellows in my class. Seems the last two years of college life, with its studies and social duties, has shown on me. I do not seem able to apply myself or centralize my thoughts. I haven't any ambition. The boys say: 'I've lost my nerve,' and I have. Should I stop studying, or can I take something to re-establish my lost strength and buoyancy?"

Answer: If you take the proper amount of sleep and form regular habits, the use of three-grain cadomene tablets should soon bring you back to new life and energy. Avoid dissipation, and it will not be necessary for you to discontinue your studies. Take the tablets regularly and start using them now.

"Tiny" says: "I'm so very thin that my friends call me Tiny. I would like to increase my weight 20 pounds. How may I?"

Answer: The continued use of three-grain hypo-nuclane tablets taken with your meals should increase your weight in a very short time. I seldom hear of a case where the use of these tablets fail to increase weight and strength. They are highly recommended.

"Engineer" writes: "My work brings me out in all kinds of weather. I had a severe cold and it settled on my kidneys. They pain me very much. My system seems all bloated and at night my feet swell. Have some fever and often have chills. Please prescribe for me. Never had trouble like this before. It has been several months since I first noticed the pains in my back, and they keep getting worse."

Answer: Symptoms indicate your kidneys are in bad condition. There is likely some congestion and inflammation. Get a tube of balmwort tablets and take regularly according to directions. Try not to take cold, and in a little while you should feel alright again.

"L. F. W." writes: "I think I need a medicine to build up my blood and make it pure. Also I have chronic constipation."

Answer: Nervousness, sleeplessness, sallow complexion, coated tongue and bad breath, with fever and headache, result from impure blood, which is the result of constipation, indigestion, etc. A real medicine is three-grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur). I have prescribed these thousands of times with great success.—ADVERTISEMENT.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of our dear son and brother, George S. Bisso, who departed this life suddenly May 31, 1914:

Sad and sudden was the call
For our dear son and brother, loved by all.
We little thought that on that day
Our dear son and brother would be called away.
We could not realize what was said,
When the message came that he was dead.
No one knows how much we miss you,
For you was so good, so kind and true;
It's hard to bear that you are missing;
We sigh, we weep, we pray for you,
Although you are gone but not forgotten,
Never shall your memory fade;
Loving hearts will often linger
Round the grave where you are laid.

Sadly missed by his father and mother, sisters and brothers.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of my dear husband, Fred Wenzel, who departed this life one year ago, June 1, 1914. Sadly missed by his WIFE.

In Memoriam.

In memory of my dear son and our brother, Eddie Hueppner, who departed this life May 26, 1913. Sadly missed by the one that loved him so dearly.

MOTHER AND BROTHERS.

In Memoriam.

In memory of our dear daughter and sister, Ada Menze, who departed this life May 23, 1914:

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

Sadly missed by father, mother, sisters and brother.

J. J. MENZE AND FAMILY.

In Memoriam.

In loving memory of our dear mother, Emma Bohle, who departed this life May 31, 1910.

Just five years ago you left us,
How we miss you mother, dear;
You are gone, but not forgotten,
By the ones who loved you dear.

Sadly missed by
BEREAVED CHILDREN.

In Memoriam.

In memory of Thomas Haines, District Chief of the St. Louis Fire Department, who departed this life three years ago, May 30, 1912.

Silently the shades of evening gather round our lonely door;
Silently they bring before us a face we see no more.

Sadly missed by his wife and children.

In Memoriam.

In memory of our dear father, John Keller, who departed from us May 29, 1912:

Three years have passed,
Our hearts still sore,
As time goes on we miss you more.
We miss your coming footsteps,
We miss you everywhere;
Home is not what it used to be,
Since our dear father is not there.

Sadly missed by
WIFE AND CHILDREN.

In Memoriam.

In sad but loving remembrance of our dearly beloved mother, Mary Kuring, who died one year ago, May 26, 1914.

The Lord said you have finished,
Come up higher, mother, so dear;
You have won a crown in heaven,
But the pain you suffered here.
Those who saw you in your casket,
Pure and white, and oh, so fair,
Thought you were the light of heaven
As you lay so sweetly there.
Rest in peace, our dear mother.

FROM CHILDREN. (c)

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of my dear husband, Ed Greenfield, who departed this life May 25, 1914.

There are griefs that cannot find comfort,
And wounds that cannot be healed,
There are sorrows so deep in the human heart
That cannot be half revealed.
We could not realize what was said
When gently told that you were dead,
But God, who loved him best,
Has taken him home to rest.

Sadly missed by wife.

THAT LOST ARTICLE MAY NOT BE FOUND TODAY

Or tomorrow or next week. In fact, a month or more may elapse before it turns up. A little persistency may be necessary. Often the article may be unfound; often fear of prosecution or hope of more satisfactory reward may delay the restoration. Then the belated awakening of the finder's conscience explains many delays. But persistency and Post-Dispatch wants will usually recover a lost article if an honest person finds it. The service of the Post-Dispatch Lost and Found Bureau is also enlisted in behalf of advertisers. (93)

5000 MILES MORE FROM YOUR OLD TIRES

Here is the most revolutionary idea in the history of the tire industry. It makes your rim-cut, tread-worn, blown-out junk castings good for another whole season, and the cost is only from $2.50 to $5.25, according to size of casing.

Go to the junk pile, get out your old casings, bring them in at once—and we will turn them into puncture and blowout proof casings.

Write for circular and price list. Send a postal and a representative will call. Call us up or come in with your old casings. Agents wanted in all small cities. Phones, Central 151, Bomont 1480.

Some Things You Know About Our Business

You know that the managers of every new subdivision want new buildings and raise the prices as soon as they get them.

You know that the people who bought in Parkview and Brentmoor when those places were new were the only ones who got unusual bargains.

You know that unless all previous tendencies reverse themselves Ames Place is in line for growth in value.

You know that Ames Place opens at a time when building is cheaper than it will be again for years—and maybe forever.

You know that we have to divide our profits with the pioneer builders of homes in Ames Place, but that we'll not continue to sell $90 ground for $60 any longer than we have to—and sixteen homes are under contract already.

You know that the acid test of any ground's value is the ease or difficulty of financing a building on it.

You know that we've applied this test and we've yet to find the first-class real estate agent who is not ready and willing to help you build in

A WORD to Prospective Home Buyers

READ THIS

A little over a year ago I purchased the old Beyert homestead, comprising over 10 acres, on the northeast corner of Natural Bridge and Euclid avenues, and which is one of the most beautifully located tracts of ground in St. Louis. It is one of the highest points in the city, thereby insuring fresh air and healthfulness; it is served by the Natural Bridge car line with a 30-minute service to Sixth and Washington avenues, and which connects with all cross-town lines east of Union avenue.

I have subdivided this beautiful tract and am now building it up with high-class, medium-priced bungalows and cottages, something different from anything yet built in St. Louis; true California bungalows with 5 and 6 rooms on the first floor, and equipped with every modern convenience for comfort and pleasure. Large porches and sun parlors are especial features of these modern homes. Hardwood floors, Dutch dining rooms, French doors, old-fashioned tile fireplaces with chimney seats are other attractive features of these buildings. Cedar clothes closets, linen closets, china closets and steel wall safes with combination locks are further attractions that will interest you.

Twenty-one of these buildings have already been erected, several of which are completed and sold. Others are just receiving the interior finish and will be ready for occupancy in a few days. The type of architecture is varied and pleasing, being calculated to satisfy every taste. All buildings have heavy 13-inch walls laid in cement mortar with high ceilings to insure coolness in summer; plenty of space is allowed between buildings, so that all rooms are light and airy. There are also other attractive features too numerous to mention, which must be seen to be appreciated. Come out today and look over these beautiful properties. You will find the prices lower than others are asking for houses that do not compare with these in any way, while the terms are easy and will be made to suit. See these beautiful homes today. Salesman on the grounds. Take Natural Bridge car to Euclid avenue.

MAN-TO-MAN TALKS WITH BOB

By Berton Braley

Number Ten ❧ CONCERNING NIGHT LIFE

Berton Braley is a Westerner whose widely known magazine work has been compared to the writings of O. Henry. He says what he means and means what he says. Hence the wholesome tang of these everyday talks in the vernacular to the young man of today :: :: ::

HELLO, Bob! You're looking just a little blue and bleary around the eyes this pleasant noontide. Up late last night?

Some party, I suppose. Blew in about five g. m.? SOME party is right!

You're getting to be a considerable tango hound, aren't you? This is about the third dawn-tea sort of affair you've told me about this week, if I'm not mistaken.

Well, you're young and strong and can stand a lot more of them than a decrepit old man of forty like me. But I'd taper off on 'em a little bit, if I were you.

Now don't get stuffy about this and don't think I'm an old fogy lecturing you about your wicked ways, because I'm nothing of the kind. I've got one or two dancing contest cups up in my own flat and I'll bet I can do as many steps in the fox trot as you can.

In my humble opinion this dance craze is a good thing. It's bettered the wind and increased the endurance and limbered up the muscles of a heap of sedentary people and it's saved its thousands from fatty degeneration and arteriosclerosis. If the air in most of the trotteries were only better there wouldn't be a more ideal exercise.

But listen, enough is plenty.

You can't dance till three or four a. m. four or five times a week and do justice to the job you're hired for. A good deal of the energy and vitality that should be devoted to your duties has been consumed in doing the fadeaway and the canter, and in office hours a lot more of it is bound to be used in fighting off drowsiness. And, even granting that you are able to handle your work as well as though you'd had enough sleep, you're drawing on your capital of health and strength. Which means a breakdown in time.

So unless you expect to make this dance thing your career in life, permit me respectfully to suggest that you go home moderately early week nights and reserve the all night sessions for Saturday. I'm putting this simply as a business proposition. I can't see that it's immoral to dance all night if you like it, but if it slows you up in your work and thereby delays or prevents your rise in the world, it doesn't pay, does it?

I had a friend once who smoked about eighteen cigars a day. It wasn't good for him, but it didn't seem to be especially bad for him. Suddenly he cut down to two cigars a day, one after lunch and one after dinner at night.

"I found I was debasing a luxury into a necessity," he explained to me. "All my smoking before was a more or less mechanical habit which enslaved me. I didn't get any real pleasure out of it. Now I look forward to my two smokes with real anticipation and delight, and when they come they give me a feeling of rich satisfaction and content."

There's a thought for you. Why not save up the dances until they're a luxury and find out what a lot of fun you've missed by making them a habit? Get your exercise in a gym or a tennis court during the week and make the big splurge on Saturday. That doesn't mean that a mid-week blowout once in a blue moon isn't permissible. What I'm trying to drive at is that anything which keeps you from thinking and working your best is bad dope, however good it may be in itself. Maybe that idea is efficiency gone mad, but take it as something I said, anyhow.

Woman During the War and After

"WHEN before," asks Edwin Davies Schoonmaker, in his new book, "The World Storm and Beyond" (Century Co.), "was the threshold so conspicuously the dividing line between man's world and woman's world?

"Suddenly over Europe, as over a vast field with millions of human beings at work and at play in the consciousness of a common humanity, a great Hand has come down upon the nations and separated the sexes, moving the male to the borders and leaving the female in the interiors. On one side of a chasm, rifted as by an earthquake and unfathomable almost as life itself, are fathers and husbands and brothers; on the other, mothers and wives and sisters.

"And but yesterday in the streets of the cities, in the fields of labor, in the places of merriment, man and woman were becoming one. Their occupations were blending, their lives were coalescing and eliciting more and more respect and understanding. Today, as at a stroke of a sword, they are two, cosmically two, with vast seas between them.

"The gradual knitting together of the ages is torn asunder. Like an old scar the sex line has reappeared, and there is no sanctuary even in the home. From a being clothed yesterday with chivalry and touching a woman's hand with reverence, man has suddenly dropped back into the jungle and is abroad about his ancient business of killing; while, as in the early days of the race, woman is flying from the ravager, or is about the house tending her orphans, or in the fields wondering why, watching the horizons, anxious how the battle is going, or kneeling in the wake of the storm, binding up her wounded lord."

As her recent coming out into the world manifests, the author continues, woman remains the most potential phenomenon of the present time. "What the white man, landing on the shores of the New World, was to the Indian, that to the present age is woman," he asserts.

"From the very beginning man has been the conqueror. It was man that met the wild beast, chose to meet the wild beast, for the exercise of those qualities which for centuries had been developed in protecting the mother when helpless with her young. Here for a moment the two planets touch with a small one between them, then swing on round—the one, we may say, to the right; the other, to the left; the one toward conquest for food, the other towards a gentler, less strenuous life, centering in her child.

"In a word, as far back as we can trace it, Life is manifesting itself more and more in two forms and is carefully gathering about these two forms such activities and occupations as will develop to the best advantage those qualities which she is persistently seeking to develop: in the male, power; in the female, love.

"On the one hand we see the world dehumanized for purposes of production, until it has become possible for great cities annually to turn thousands of their helpless men, women and children out upon the streets for no other cause than that for one reason or another they have not fitted into the iron machinery of production.

"On the other side we see woman at present shut out from the larger institutions of the world. Nothing in human psychology, in its social manifestations, so fills one with astonishment as to see humanity, conscious of its lost condition, crying up to the skies for love, while with equal fervor the heart of woman is yearning for the world."

It is clear, the author drives home his point, that "the fundamental trouble with society is the separation of power from love, our willingness to give to power the utmost freedom in the building and control of industries and empires, and our refusal to allow the love-nature of woman any social expression.

"It is as though the race were suffering from thirst and at the same time was doing everything in its power to keep all the oxygen on one side of the heavens and all the hydrogen on the other side."

Imagine woman, as a landlord, in the dispossessing business! exclaims Schoonmaker. "Picture her, if you can, walking through her factory where pale women are at work, and seeing only the machinery! That Herr Krupp should manufacture cannon creates no feeling of unfitness. But when Herr Krupp suddenly dies and his business falls into the lap of his daughter, Bertha, the incongruity is too great to be tolerated. Immediately, not for business reasons but for moral reasons, a husband must be found to relieve the monstrous situation."

The significant fact in the present war, from woman's standpoint, says the author, is that she is being compelled to fill the gaps left in the ranks of the world's labor by the departure and slaughter of men. He points to the plague of the Black Death, which ravaged England in the Fourteenth Century, as having contributed more than any other force to the break-down of serfdom in the island kingdom.

"Does any one imagine," he asks, "that a similar slaughter can take place today and similar consequences not follow? For years Europe has seethed with the political, economic and marital unrest of woman. And now that Death is abroad opening thousands upon thousands of domestic doors and thrusting woman toward the outer world and freedom, is there anyone who does not perceive that the end of another and far wider serfdom is at hand?

"We get but half the meaning of the conflict if we do not see that the fall of every soldier upon the borders drafts a woman into a man's place in the interiors. Read the lists of the fallen as they lengthen out day by day into the millions, and high above the surges of steel in the foreground stands out the astounding fact that woman, who hitherto has not been master even of her own home, will presently find herself in possession of a continent.

"The great question of the present conflict is not what, when the war is over, the Allies will do with Germany or Germany with the Allies, but what woman will do with her opportunity. Will she understand that to give peace and justice to the world love must sit side by side with power, not only willing, but able to intervene? Or in the inevitable struggle to reach this high place, will she forget her great cosmic mission—to release into the world the waters of love—and hardened by the conflict become a second male, another unit of power to continue the ravages of the first? Will this homemaker of centuries lose her vision and forget that the divine purpose of her coming is to make the world a home?"

Ex-Member of British Parliament Reveals He Was a German Spy

Amazing confession of a naturalized subject of England, who, for revenge, sought to betray his adopted country to her enemies.

THIS narrative, exclusively told by the Sunday Post-Dispatch Magazine, is the most astounding personal story which the European war has produced. To get an accurate focus, one must imagine that an ex-member of Congress itself had turned traitor, had plotted to dispatch the American fleet to a point at which it would inevitably be destroyed by a superior enemy; had employed his prestige as a former Congressman to obtain the confidence of Secretary Bryan, Gen. Wood and Admiral Fletcher; and finally had written in his own words a confession of his perfidy.

"High treason" is the term which Ignatius Timotheus Tribisch-Lincoln admits might be applied to his acts. The details of his story are authenticated by letters and documents in possession of the New York representatives of the Sunday Post-Dispatch Magazine, including a letter from David Lloyd-George and a telegram from Sir Edward Grey. Some of them are herewith reproduced.

Lincoln was born in Hungary and is a converted Jew. He was a Presbyterian and then an Anglican minister in Montreal, Canada, and a Curate in England. From January to December, 1910, he was a member of the House of Commons. His stepson is actually serving at the front with the British army. Under circumstances of considerable difficulty, Lincoln made his escape from England to the United States a few weeks ago.

THE following paragraph appeared in the newspapers on April 29:

CODE OF SPY USED TO SPY ON GERMANS

British Correspond With Kaiser's Workers Under Name of Kuepferle, a Prisoner.

LONDON, April 19—Anton Kuepferle, the American citizen of German birth, who hails from Brooklyn, and is held for trial on a charge of supplying Germany with information concerning the movements of British troops and ships, is said to have been the means of affording British detectives much inside information concerning the workings of the German spy system, with headquarters in Holland.

Kuepferle's arrest was kept a secret for nearly two months. Meantime it is reported that Scotland Yard men were using the prisoner's name as a means of communicating with German officials in Holland. In Kuepferle's baggage sheets of paper for use with invisible ink were found. Imitating Kuepferle's handwriting, the detectives are said to have written letters to German spy chiefs, between the lines of which they traced in invisible ink all sorts of questions asking for further instructions. A rapid fire correspondence is reported to have continued until Kuepferle had actually been in jail for many weeks.

THE interesting, dramatic turn in this report is provided by the statement that Scotland Yard actually did correspond with German officials in Holland, in the name of Kuepferle—unknown to the German secret service. This is indeed interesting. The joker, however, is to be found in the fact that the German secret service knew that Kuepferle's alleged reports came from Scotland Yard and the requested instructions they ostensibly sent to Kuepferle were indeed meant to mislead the British officials.

I happened to be one of the dramatis personae in this intriguing and counter-intrigue, in the plotting and counter-plotting, in the deep-laid scheming of one brain against the other.

It is a story full of human and dramatic interest, the details of which are known only to me outside of some officials of the British and German secret services. I have hitherto refrained from publishing it, but now that no harm can result for those whom I intended serving and now that Kuepferle's death by suicide is officially made known, there can be no possible objection to setting down the story.

To make myself perfectly clear, I shall begin at the beginning and tell exactly who I am, so as to make plain my course and the reasons that actuated me.

I am a native of Hungary, of Jewish extraction. In 1900 I became a convert to Christianity and entered upon a study of theology in Germany, moving in 1901 to Canada and continuing and completing my theological studies in the Presbyterian College of Montreal.

In 1902 I was appointed Jewish missionary in Montreal by the Presbyterian Church. But I am of an independent turn of mind and like to go my own way. I am always in revolt against preconceived, conventional notions and ideas. Within a few weeks of my appointment I broke away from the Presbyterians and joined the Anglican Church. One can serve one's ideals and principles in any environment. I was ordained into the Anglican Church by the Bishof Montreal on Christmas, 1902. In March, 1903, my health, on account of overwork, brought about by incessant preaching, broke down and I went to Germany on a three months' holiday, my wife being a native of Germany.

My intention was to return to Canada, but instead I went to England (September, 1903) and became curate of a parish in the Archdiocese of Canterbury.

However, I soon found that there was a world of difference between being an Anglican missionary in the free and easy clerical atmosphere of the Dominion and being a curate in the Established Church in England. For 14 months I continued to minister to the spiritual needs of a country parish—but at last I could not do so longer. I left my parish with the determination never again to take up clerical work. Accordingly, I wrote a frank letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who released me from my duties.

I left the church and with it clerical work, with the fixed determination to enter British politics. My vicar, to whom I told of this and of my intention of becoming a member of Parliament, replied: "You are mad. You can never become an M. P. in England. There is too much against you."

At this time I was not yet naturalized in England. I quietly replied to my vicar: "Mark my words, within six years I shall be an M. P." As a matter of fact, five years and eight months from this date I was a British legislator, having been naturalized a few months previously.

Dear Mr. Lincoln,

You have my heartiest good wishes in your contest at Darlington. A win at Darlington would be a great victory for Free Trade and Liberalism, and I feel confident that the vigour with which you have conducted your campaign and the excellence of our cause will combine to defeat the forces of re-action and Protectionism.

Yours sincerely,

D Lloyd George

Lloyd-George's encouraging letter to I. T. T. Lincoln, written in 1910.

After leaving the church I became the private secretary of one of the foremost men in England, a powerful factor in the councils of the Liberal party, Mr. B. S. Rowntree, the cocoa manufacturer of York. I was conducting for him an economic investigation on the continent of Europe. This investigation took four years to accomplish. The results of it were published in 1910 under the title: "Land and Labor Lessons From Belgium."

This investigation brought me naturally into contact with many of the leading members of the Liberal party. I found myself growing deeply interested in British politics. The great movement of social uplift was under way. I was part of it. It was another new devotion. I decided to reduce the handicap against my effectiveness attached to a foreign name. In 1905, then, I added to my own name (Tribitsch) that of Lincoln. In 1909 I took out naturalization papers in the name of Tribitsch-Lincoln.

In the summer of 1909 I received an invitation from a big industrial constituency in the North of England to become their candidate. This I gladly accepted.

The then member had represented that constituency for 11 years, his father before him and previous to that his grandfather, who has a monument in the market place.

The task seemed hopeless. I had everything against me, but what I lacked by way of social or family influence, I tried to make up by brain power. When the poll was declared on the election night I was elected by the small majority of 29. It was a difficult task, yet I had accomplished it.

I received congratulations from many of the most prominent men in England, including Sir Edward Grey.

I was not long in the House before I made my maiden speech, which drew forth praise from Mr. Lloyd-George and conferred upon me the rare and much coveted distinction of having my caricature on the political page of Punch.

Ignatius T. Tribitsch-Lincoln.

I was elected to Parliament in January, 1910. It may be recalled that that year was a time of acute political strife in England, the conflict between the House of Lords and the House of Commons having been brought to a head by the defeat in the lower house of Lloyd-George's famous budget. The Government dissolved Parliament and appealed to the electorate in December, 1910. To fight an election means heavy personal expenditure, and not being in the position to finance two elections in the same year, I did not allow my name to be put forward as a candidate for re-election.

After that and until the outbreak of the war, I devoted myself to my business interests in Rumania and Galicia, intending to return to the House of Commons at some later time.

But the war upset all my intentions and plans and forced me into an attitude of hostility to the policy of England, which eventually led me into the dangerous but highly fascinating sphere of secret service work.

The outbreak of the conflict did not surprise me. For years I foresaw its coming.

According to my reading of contemporary history, two fundamental causes, in addition to others, have brought about the present war:

1. Great Britain's jealousy of German industrial and commercial expansion.
2. Great Britain's unheard of and preposterous pretensions to rule all the seas, and rule them alone.

The first is so patent to all observers that I need not adduce any facts or indication in support of it.

As to the second, I should like to point out that the great increase in the German navy was really begun after the Boer War, during which the German mail steamer Bundesrath's arrest and search for alleged contraband inflamed German opinion.

On May 6, 1909, in a speech I delivered in my constituency as parliamentary candidate (I had to be careful what I said), I made the following remarks:

"Taking the present condition of things, we cannot abolish the navy. We must have a strong navy, and if Germany is going to build 32 dreadnoughts, it would be folly on the part of Great Britain to be unprepared. But why are the Germans building 32 dreadnoughts? Because Great Britain made treaties with almost every nation in Europe except her, alleging that they have no need for a treaty with her because there is no cause for quarrel."

But Great Britain went on provoking Germany, and the war broke out.

Of course, true to her tradition, Great Britain gave it out that she is fighting for right, justice, for small nations.

No; this war, which is a negation of all the noble good we profess, was in the first instance brought about by England.

With this conviction firmly settled I still would have remained a disagreeing but loyal naturalized Englishman. Indeed, my eldest son joined Kitchener's army. But other things happened which prompted me not to remain a mere passive spectator of the great European drama. Immediately after the outbreak of the war the pent-up feeling of half a generation of British dislike for Germans gave vent in unrestrained outbursts of intense hatred of everything German, of every non-naturalized German, of every Austrian or Hungarian, not naturalized; of every foreigner, except the allies, of course; and of all naturalized British subjects of German or Austro-Hungarian origin.

A campaign of the meanest and most contemptible persecution of individuals set in. These uncontrolled and subconscious feelings spontaneously revealed conclusive evidence—if evidence is wanted—of the real cause of the war. It was not concern for Belgium's independence or neutrality, but a violent hatred of the Germans. All the newspapers, with the exception of the Westminster Gazette, Manchester Guardian and the Nation, enhanced, inflamed and intensified not only hatred of Germany, but of individual Germans, Austrians

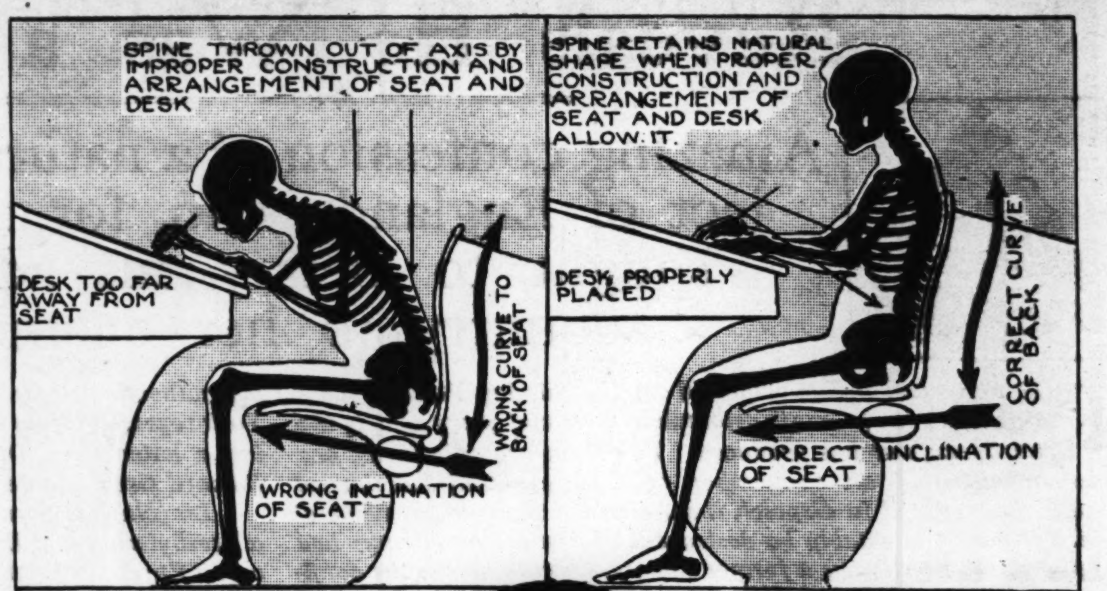
The Ordinary Chair as Mankind's Enemy

Osteopaths convinced that, through faulty design, it causes general weakness of the spine which, in turn, reduces the normal condition of vital organs to an extent which makes them vulnerable to many diseases, tuberculosis, for instance



SPINE THROWN OUT OF AXIS BY IMPROPER CONSTRUCTION AND ARRANGEMENT OF SEAT AND DESK
DESK TOO FAR AWAY FROM SEAT
WRONG CURVE TO BACK OF SEAT
WRONG INCLINATION OF SEAT
SPINE RETAINS NATURAL SHAPE WHEN PROPER CONSTRUCTION AND ARRANGEMENT OF SEAT AND DESK ALLOW IT.
DESK PROPERLY PLACED CORRECT CURVE OF BACK
CORRECT INCLINATION OF SEAT

How the school seat, through faulty design, distorts the spine and from that cause weakens various organs of the body—Also a correctly designed chair, according to osteopaths.

THE chair, looked upon throughout all ages of the civilized world as one of the greatest conveniences of man, has been declared to be one of the most deadly enemies of the human race. The tired man who has toiled all day and spends his evening at home in his comfortable rocker, the business man or clerk who spends his day in an office chair or the child who sits in his seat at school, is courting all manner of disease, according to the decision of the Kansas and Missouri Association of Osteopaths at their recent Kansas City convention.

Tuberculosis, heart and kidney disease, Bright's disease, and almost every other ailment to which the body is subject, can be traced back to the chair, the osteopaths have decided. The trouble with the chair, they say, is that it is not properly shaped to hold the body in a natural position. And it is not only the ordinary chair, but almost every seat in general use, that is condemned by the osteopaths. The street car seat is declared to be a menace and the autoist who sits on an upholstered seat is preparing the way for tuberculosis or other disease.

The osteopaths have announced that they will have a chair made which will support the body in a natural position and will make an effort to have it put into general use.

The theory upon which the osteopaths base their charges against the chair is that it gives to the spine an unnatural curve and that this curve affects practically every organ of the body.

The spinal cord is the axis of the body, they declare. This axis runs from the brain to the arch of the foot, and has a natural curve. When a person is sitting in a chair shaped according to the accepted pattern the curve in the spine is said to be reversed.

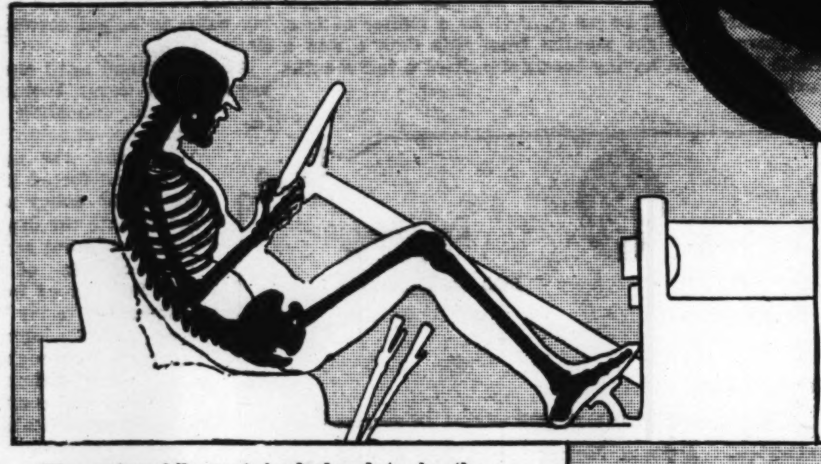
Dr. J. D. Edwards.

Dr. J. D. Edwards of St. Louis, after his return from the Kansas City convention, explained that the lungs, heart and other organs of the body are controlled by nerves which run from the spinal cord to the various organs. These nerves control the action of the blood vessels, and when the spinal cord is unnaturally curved these nerve tissues lose in nutrition. In the case of the lungs the blood frequently becomes dammed up in them and the drainage clogged, which produces an unnatural and therefore unhealthy condition.



The automobile seat is declared to be the worst of all.

The blood from the heart goes to the segments of the spine, Dr. Edwards says, and from these various segments to the other organs of the body. The unnatural curve of the spinal cord, therefore, causes the circulation to be interfered with. Osteopaths declare that corrective exercises taken under the supervision of a physician who is familiar with the anatomy of the human body will restore the spine to the natural condition.

The reversed curve interferes with the functions of practically all of the organs. The hips, when the body is in a sitting position, it is pointed out, act as the foundation of the body. If the hips are not in a natural position, the effect upon the body is said to be the same as the effect upon a house when the foundation is disarranged.

The osteopaths say that the body to be in a natural sitting position should be upon a chair which is so shaped that the knees will be lower than the hips. The chair that they propose to have constructed will have a flat seat with a very slight slant towards the front.

Most chairs now in general use have a depression in the bottom or else slant slightly towards the back. This causes the legs to be higher than the hips and, the osteopaths say, places the hips in an unnatural position, which in turn affects the spine.

Street car seats are declared to be especially bad. Many street-car passengers sit with their knees up against the seat in front of them, thus throwing the weight of their body upon the bones which are at the base of the spine.

Autoists are said to sit in the most unnatural position of all, especially the drivers of autos. They slide well down upon the base of the spine with the feet and legs considerably higher. This is declared to be responsible for an increase in tuberculosis among chauffeurs and those who drive their own machines.

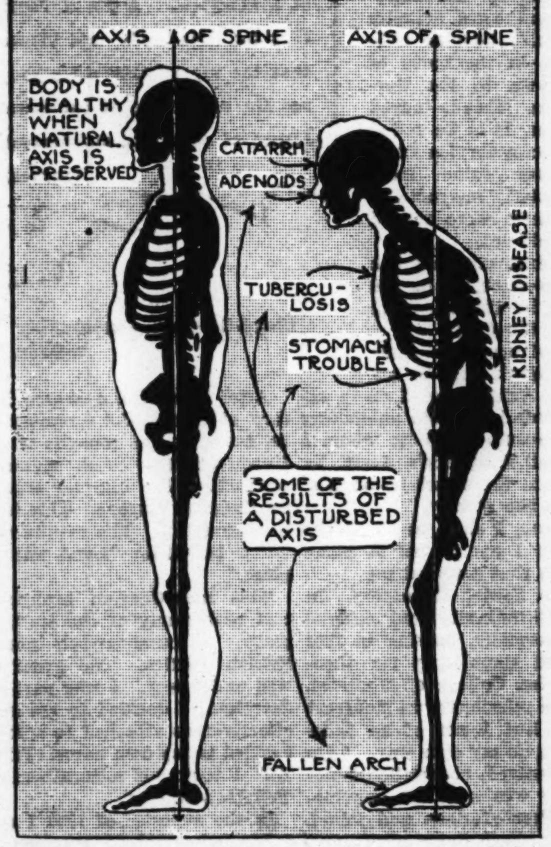
Dr. Edwards says that the theory upon which the conclusions of the osteopaths are based does not in any way discredit the germ theory of cause for disease which has been accepted by physicians universally. The germ, in order to be injurious to the body, must first have an avenue of entrance to the organ which it affects. There must also be a resistance lower than normal before the germ can become injurious. The theory of the osteopaths is that if the spine is kept in its natural position, in a great majority of cases the other organs of the body will remain in their normal condition and there will be no avenue of entrance and no lower resistance.

All impulses from the brain to any part of the body, Dr. Edwards points out, must pass through the spinal cord, and therefore if the spinal cord is unnaturally curved the functions of any organ in the body may be hindered.

The lungs have been declared to be especially susceptible to disease caused by this unnatural curve of the spine. A curve which forms between the shoulders, Dr. Edwards says, is responsible for lung trouble. A very large percentage of heart and kidney diseases, Dr. Edwards says, can be traced directly to the spine. Many cases of eye weakness among children, he also reports, are caused by the seats in schoolrooms and the desks which, he says, should be higher and closer to the child so an unnatural curve of the back would not be necessary in writing or reading a book that is lying upon the desk.

To illustrate the theory that the backs of seats and chairs generally do not conform to the natural need of the spine, Dr. Edwards said that it was very common for a person who is suffering with a pain in the back to place a pillow between the body and the back of the chair.

In every case of broken arch or flatfoot, the doctor says, the case can be traced to an unnatural position of the spine, generally caused by the shape of the chairs.



The correct axis of the human figure and as it is often distorted through faulty chairs.

Dr. Edwards asserts that the theory has been proved by a series of experiments upon dogs. At the A. T. Still Research Laboratories in Chicago, he says, a number of dogs were examined and treated until they were declared to be absolutely normal. Then the spines of a number of them were unnaturally curved and they were put in a plaster cast and watched for about two months. At the end of that time they were killed. A number of healthy dogs were also killed, and examinations and comparisons of the organs of the bodies made. In every case some organ had been affected by the unnatural position of the spine, it is declared.

Dr. Edwards asserts that the reversal of a spine can be straightened out by a recently perfected table. The patient is strapped to this table face down. The feet are fastened and the upper part of the body made secure by straps that pass around the back. This table separates in the center and either end may be moved up and down or to either side. By operating the table the spine is drawn out to its natural position. By operating it to the side the reverse curve is taken out. This treatment is repeated many times.

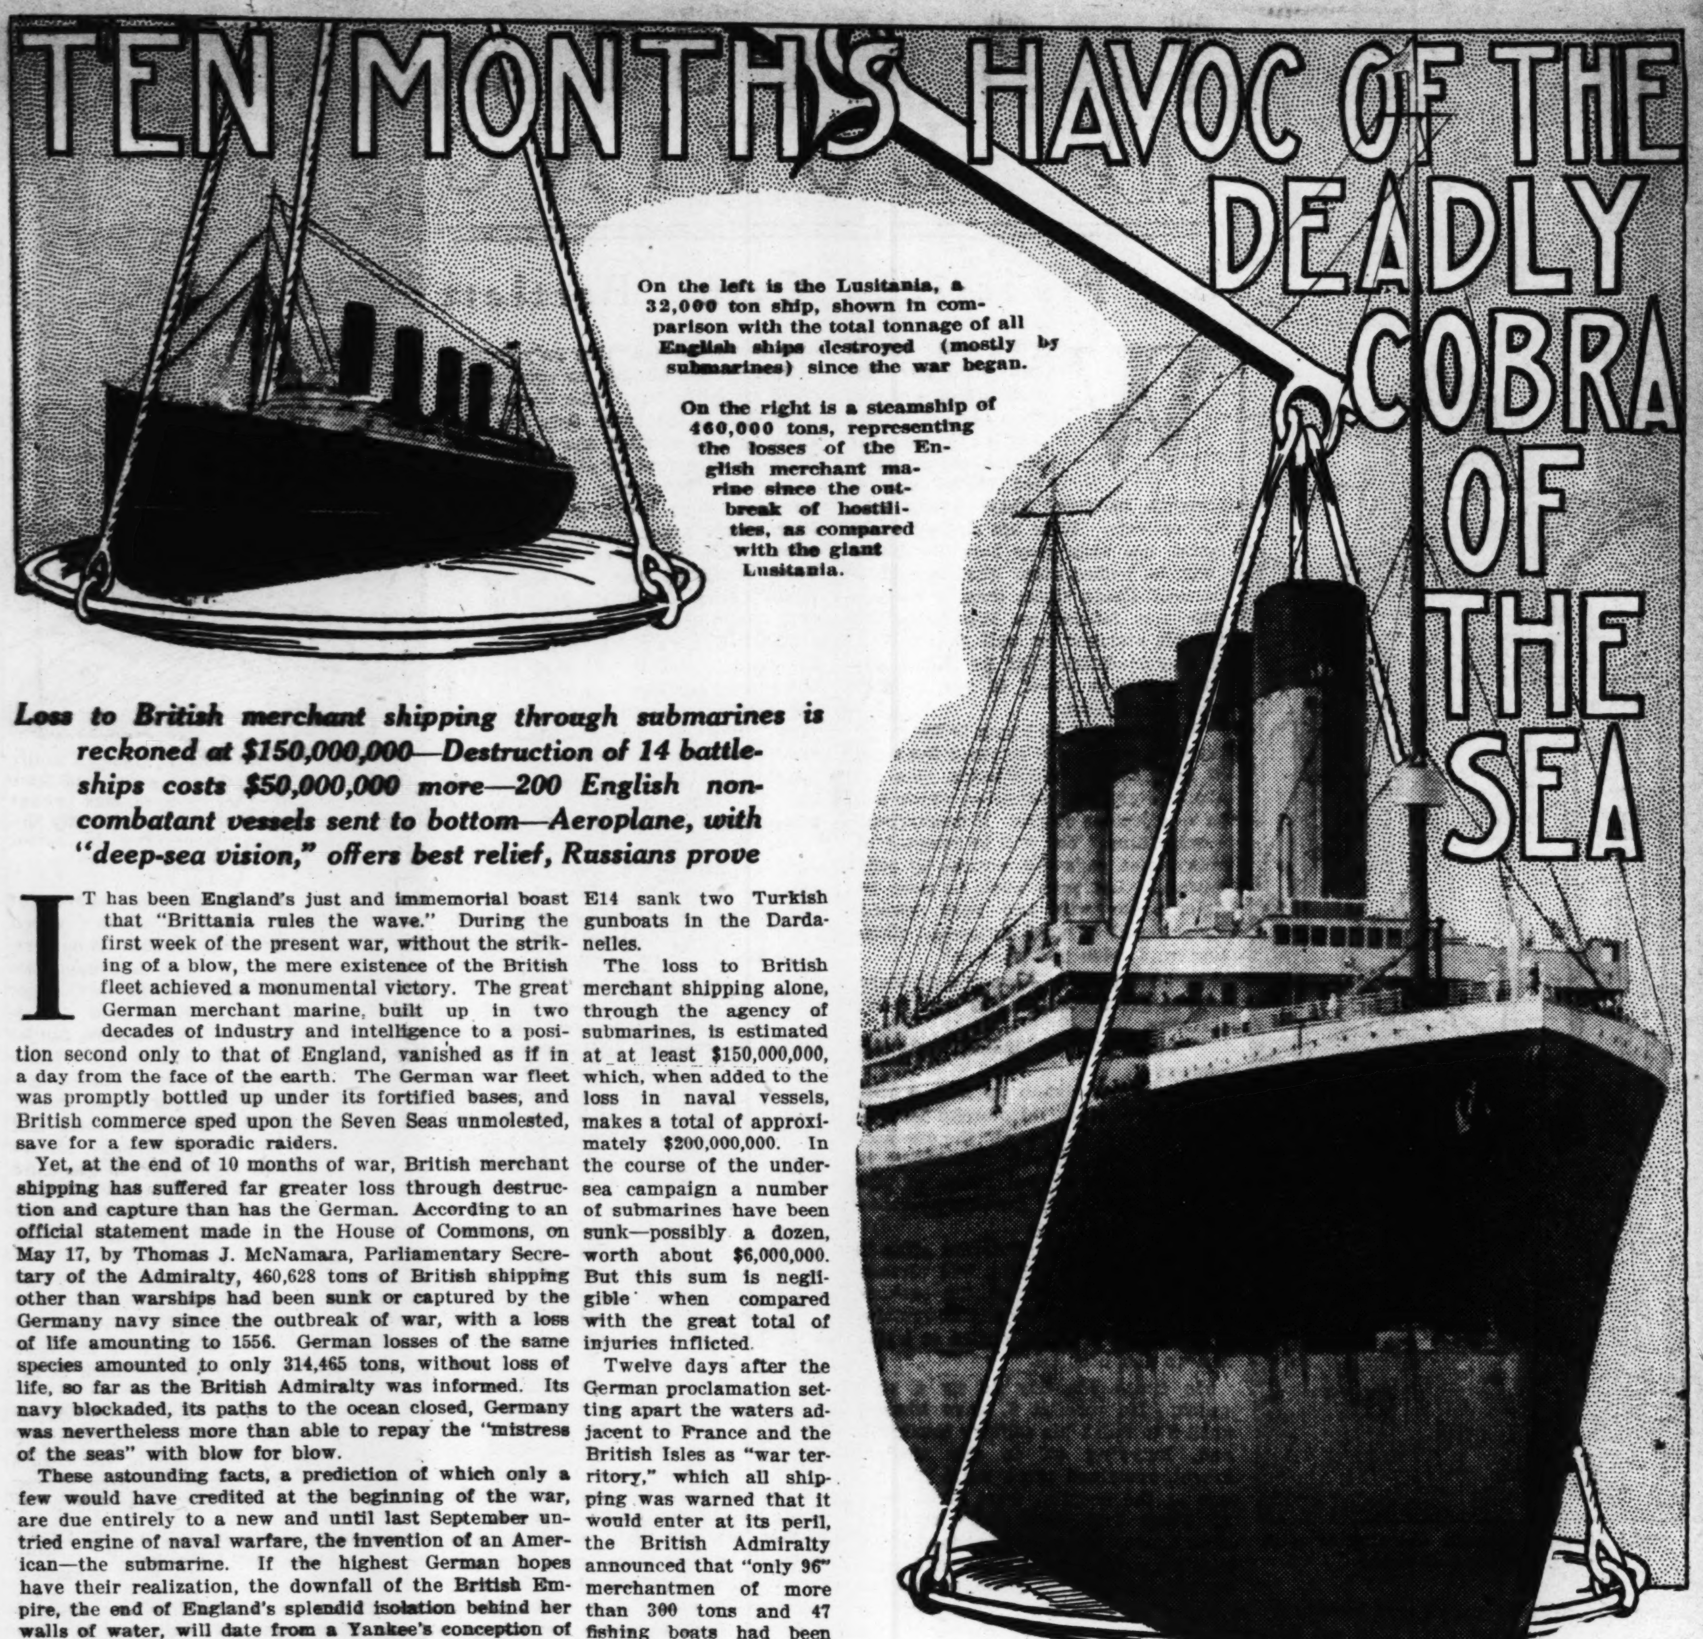
TEN MONTHS HAVOC OF THE DEADLY COBRA OF THE SEA



On the left is the Lusitania, a 32,000 ton ship, shown in comparison with the total tonnage of all English ships destroyed (mostly by submarines) since the war began.

On the right is a steamship of 460,000 tons, representing the losses of the English merchant marine since the outbreak of hostilities, as compared with the giant Lusitania.

Loss to British merchant shipping through submarines is reckoned at $150,000,000—Destruction of 14 battleships costs $50,000,000 more—200 English noncombatant vessels sent to bottom—Aeroplane, with "deep-sea vision," offers best relief, Russians prove

IT has been England's just and immemorial boast that "Brittania rules the wave." During the first week of the present war, without the striking of a blow, the mere existence of the British fleet achieved a monumental victory. The great German merchant marine, built up in two decades of industry and intelligence to a position second only to that of England, vanished as if in a day from the face of the earth. The German war fleet was promptly bottled up under its fortified bases, and British commerce sped upon the Seven Seas unmolested, save for a few sporadic raiders.

Yet, at the end of 10 months of war, British merchant shipping has suffered far greater loss through destruction and capture than has the German. According to an official statement made in the House of Commons, on May 17, by Thomas J. McNamara, Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, 460,628 tons of British shipping other than warships had been sunk or captured by the Germany navy since the outbreak of war, with a loss of life amounting to 1556. German losses of the same species amounted to only 314,465 tons, without loss of life, so far as the British Admiralty was informed. Its navy blockaded, its paths to the ocean closed, Germany was nevertheless more than able to repay the "mistress of the seas" with blow for blow.

These astounding facts, a prediction of which only a few would have credited at the beginning of the war, are due entirely to a new and until last September untried engine of naval warfare, the invention of an American—the submarine. If the highest German hopes have their realization, the downfall of the British Empire, the end of England's splendid isolation behind her walls of water, will date from a Yankee's conception of a war boat with the faculty of submerging itself under the sea.

The submarine, as this is written, has taken toll of 14 battleships of the allies, 11 of them British. The submarine, since the outbreak of war, has destroyed more than 200 British noncombatant vessels. Of these 93 were sunk in the adjacent waters of the British Isles themselves, within twelve weeks after the war zone decree of Feb. 18. The German campaign of "frightfulness," the aim of which is to terrorize British shipping off the oceans, came to its climax in the destruction of the Lusitania, with a loss of 1049 lives, more than 100 of them Americans.

These figures are taken from newspaper records, and cannot pretend to be official. The truth very likely exceeds the statistics given, as numerous instances of disaster have been suppressed by the authorities of the various warring Powers.

But even these reports show that the submarine has accounted for at least $50,000,000 worth of battleships, cruisers and destroyers, from which only a small fraction of their big crews was ever saved.

The sinking of three armored cruisers—Aboukir, Cressy and Hogue—on the one day of Sept. 22, by a single submarine, commanded by the gallant Lieut. von Weddigen, afforded the world a dramatic awakening to the potentialities of the little David which has arisen against the Goliath of the seas. It was followed in the next three weeks by the destruction of a German destroyer by a Russian submarine, Oct. 7; the sinking of the Russian cruiser Pallada in the Baltic by a German submarine, Oct. 12, and the torpedoing of the British cruiser Hawke, Oct. 15.

German submarines then invaded the inviolable waters of the British Isles. The cruiser Hermes was sunk off Dover Oct. 31. Two weeks later the battleship Audacious was sunk on the coast of Ireland. The battleship Bulwark, lying in the mouth of the Thames itself, off Sheerness, blew up Nov. 26. The Germans declared it was the work of a submarine.

A British submarine worked through the mine fields of the Dardanelles and on Dec. 13 sank the Turkish battleship Messudieh. The British battleship Formidable went down after a submarine's torpedo crashed into her off Plymouth, on Jan. 4. The French dreadnought Courbet was sunk by an Austrian submarine in the Mediterranean on Jan. 11. On Jan. 25 a Russian submarine sent the German cruiser Gazelle to the bottom of the Baltic. The British auxiliary cruiser Boyans was torpedoed by a submarine off Corsewall, Scotland, on March 11. Austrian submarines sent the French cruiser Leon Gambetta to the bottom of the Adriatic, April 26, and the British destroyer Recruit was sent to the bottom of the North Sea. On May 12 the British submarine E14 sank two Turkish gunboats in the Dardanelles.

The loss to British merchant shipping alone, through the agency of submarines, is estimated at at least $150,000,000, which, when added to the loss in naval vessels, makes a total of approximately $200,000,000. In the course of the undersea campaign a number of submarines have been sunk—possibly a dozen, worth about $6,000,000. But this sum is negligible when compared with the great total of injuries inflicted.

Twelve days after the German proclamation setting apart the waters adjacent to France and the British Isles as "war territory," which all shipping was warned that it would enter at its peril, the British Admiralty announced that "only 96" merchantmen of more than 300 tons and 47 fishing boats had been destroyed by the Germans since the beginning of the war. From that time there has scarcely been a day when news of the torpedoing of one or more vessels—on one day there were six—has not come over the cables. In very few cases have British warships been able to come within gunshot of the under-sea raiders. The entire British fleet, with the seas of the world open at its back, has been unable to keep German submarines out of England's home waters.

Is there no redress against this destructive mite which, hidden under the sea, sends destruction speeding against battleship and liner alike? There is, according to Charles C. Witmer, American aviator, who has just arrived home after spending six months with Russia's Black Sea fleet. The only force that can cope with the submarine, he says, is that other new American invention—the aeroplane. This is because the areoplane possesses the faculty of what is called "deep-sea vision."

(Photograph by passenger aboard the Batavia.)

An aviator, when he reaches a certain height in the air, finds that the depths of the ocean open up to his eyes. In clear waters like the Mediterranean, he can see as far as 100 feet below the surface, and to him are clearly visible any submarines and mines that are lurking beneath. "The aeroplane," said Witmer, "is the periscope of the battleship."

"If the British Government," he declares, "had employed the same methods that the Russians have put into effect to keep the Black Sea coast clear of German vessels, the Lusitania could not have been destroyed.

"Since the time the Breslau and the Goeben threatened Sevastopol the Russians have been depending entirely upon air craft to keep the coast free of sea raiders. Every day of my three months' stay in Sevastopol I saw the aeroplanes leave for a reconnaissance trip that would take them 50 miles out to sea. Seven aeroplanes were used for this purpose, and they searched a 50-mile strip of ocean daily, at intervals, looking for German submarines and cruisers, which, by the way, did not venture near after one experience had taught them a lesson.

"One morning, one of the air scouts brought back the information that the Goeben and Breslau were making for the port, and were then only a few miles distant. The order was immediately given for the seven flying boats to 'take the air,' each carry two 40-pound bombs. While the order was being executed a shell from the Goeben came shrieking between the two rows of hangars, but fortunately did not explode. The hangars are located near the wireless station, which is close to the entrance of the railroad tunnel. The purpose was undoubtedly to wreck the tunnel, and thereby paralyze the railroads. The second shell struck back of the hangars, too far back to do any damage, and 40 others were fired as the cruisers moved out of the harbor, before the aeroplanes could start. The shells all fell short of their mark.

"Then the seven flying boats—all of American make, delivered just before the outbreak of war—started, and, circling over the two steamers as they proceeded in full retreat, under full steam, out of the harbor, dropped their bombs and hurried back to shore. This maneuver was carried out without a flaw, but while the machines were returning to shore for their second load of bombs, the cruisers had gained too many miles to make further damage by dropping of bombs possible, so the aeroplanes returned to shore after a long chase. Just how badly the cruisers were damaged has never been ascertained, but it is a fact that neither of them ever returned.

"After the initial success, the defense of the entire coast was left to the aeroplanes, and for three months, during my stay at Sevastopol, I saw them go out daily to reconnoiter. In this way, Russia was able, with an equipment of seven aeroplanes, costing about $100,000, to dispense with the services of several cruisers and to insure ample protection to Sevastopol from the German sea raiders.

"The employment of a few aeroplanes on the Irish coast would have saved the Lusitania. Their daily reconnoitering would have prevented submarines from coming nearer that 50 miles to the coast, beyond which danger line the Lusitania would have had little to fear.

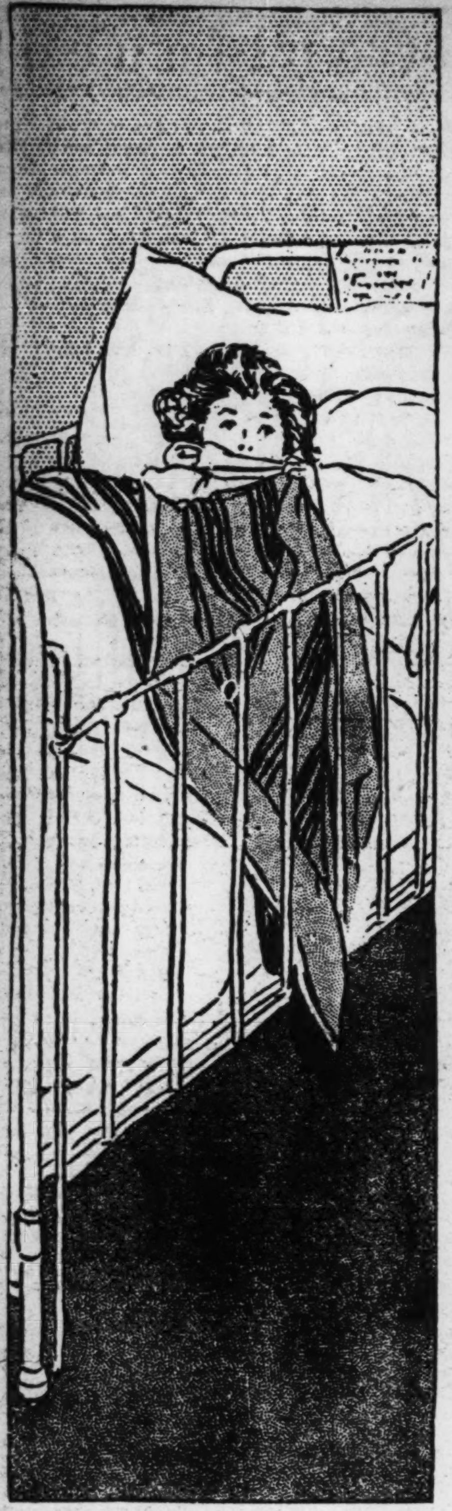
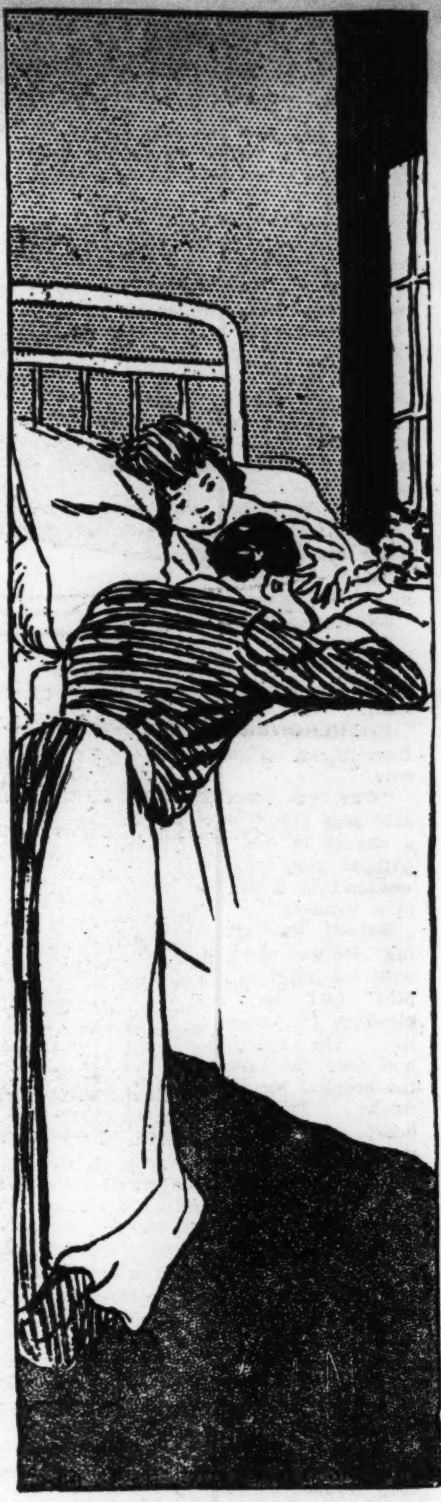
THE COST OF LOVING

By Frederick Orin Bartlett



"She shrank beneath the clothes with only her eyes showing."



"The nurse threw herself on her knees beside the little girl."

WITH a slight lift of his shoulders Dr. Schriftman brought to a close his final lecture for the year to the senior medical class. For a moment he faced these young men aggressively. With his shaggy white beard, his wiry gray hair, his bulky body, he looked more like some good-natured Santa Claus than a surgeon who was famous on two continents for his stoicism as well as his skill. It was tradition that he should say what he was about to say to each graduating class.

"Shentlemen," he began in his rough guttural, which still retained the trace of an accent. "Shentlemen, you are about to enter a brofession which will be very jealous of you. It demands all—everything. You will be tempted by many false gods—by women, by gold. Peware! Let your work be your religion, your wife and your reward. So you will be goot surgeons. Shentlemen, I wish you success."

As he turned to leave the platform, he was greeted with noisy and hearty cheering.

"'Raus mit der ladies!" shouted someone.

The cry was taken up with a will, but when another voice broke through with "Hoch Schriftman!" the one hundred throats strained themselves to the utmost in a final effort to give expression to their genuine appreciation.

But Schriftman, indifferent alike to their jests and plaudits, had already jammed his silk hat on the back of his head and was hurrying downstairs to where his machine waited to whisk him to the hospital.

He timed his day as by a stop watch. He rose at 7, gave himself until 8 to finish his solitary breakfast, and, hurrying off to the medical school, remained there until 11. He was at the hospital from 11:30 until 3. From 3:10 until 5 he kept his office hours. He generally dined alone in his apartments after this and gave up his evenings to consultations, to the preparation of papers and to study. It was a long evening, for he seldom retired until 2. More often than not he was called to the hospital after this and finished his sleep there. The doctors' quarters were as much home to him as the three book-cluttered rooms which led from his office. And yet there were men—young men, too—who envied Schriftman, and when tempted by bright eyes and warm cheeks quoted to themselves his famous epigram:

"It costs too much to love."

As his machine drew up before the big gray building, a young interne hurried out, opened the door and then fell back respectfully to give to his senior the place of honor by Schriftman's side. In answer to questions which went to their mark like arrows, Burrell covered the progress of every case since the day before and turned to the new patient in Ward 27.

"Female, aged 8. Mother an actress, died of pneumonia; father a bicycle rider, killed in an accident. Family history negative."

And so with a dozen other medical details Burrell led up to the result of his preliminary examination and to the laboratory report. He made no diagnosis except in connection with her weak heart. But to Schriftman it was not the faulty heart but the chronic pain in the back which was significant. As he removed his hat and gloves before going to the ward he pressed his cross-examination deeper. It was evident to Dr. Burrell that it was to be the rare good fortune of this female, age 8, to prove an interesting case to Schriftman.

In the meantime, the lass in question lay stretched out on her back, watching with hectic interest the hurried movements of the head nurse. There wasn't very much of Gretzel left; just a shriveled body, a thin mouth, a straight, sensitive nose, a pair of blue eyes and a wealth of light hair. But the eyes were quite perfect. So deep and clear, so timid and yet so wise were these that as they peered out of the haggardness of their surroundings they gave the effect of a maid within a maid. It was as though some other soul, unrelated to this pain-racked body, were peering through the mask of her gaunt features. The eyes were younger and fresher and stronger than the rest of her. At present they were unusually alert.

In contrast to the isolated boarding house room from which they had brought her, life here fairly buzzed. The plaints and groanings of her fellow patients, the shadow-like movements of the nurses, the constant coming and going of the young doctors on their unknown errands, the catlike tread of life through the night, the undercurrent of suspense and her own helplessness in the midst of it kept her on guard.

The nurses, drawn to her at once, tried to reassure her, but to little purpose, because Gretzel believed nothing of what they whispered. People had lied to her all her life. When her father had told her she would soon be well and that then he would take her far into the country, he had lied. When her father was killed, her mother had lied to her, saying that daddy had only gone away for a little while to prepare a home for them both. Then her mother had died and everyone had lied about that. They said that she had gone to join daddy and that some day she would send for Gretzel.

Finally the landlady had lied when she had been hurried off into the ambulance. This woman had assured Gretzel that she might possibly find her mother at the hospital. She hadn't found her mother—the nurses had never heard of her mother. So now, with her thin lips together, she listened, believing nothing, but kept her eyes wide open, ready for what might happen next.

Nearer and nearer to her came Fate in the person of Schriftman—Schriftman the silent, who could skirt with his knife the fringe of the soul itself. His progress through the ward was accompanied with more awe than that of a sovereign through his court. To the huddled group of internes at his back he stood for the highest goal in their profession; to those patients who knew him he stood as the literal arbiter of life and death.

When those clear eyes—as brilliantly hard as glacial ice—were upon them, when those quick, mobile fingers fluttered over their bruised bodies, they breathed slowly and prayed. For they knew it was given to him to do things possible to no other man. But though many an eye warmed at sight of him, though many an arm pleaded toward him, though many lips trembled gratitude at his approach, he rigidly preserved his impersonality. He had neither smile nor jest. His eyes never warmed; they only lighted.

Gretzel saw him as he entered the ward opposite her. She shrank beneath the clothes with only her eyes showing and studied the man. She liked his size first of all. She had a weakling's reverence for physical strength. The broad shoulders, the long, heavy arms appealed to her at once. Then she liked his whiskers. They reminded her of pictures of Santa Claus. Finally, she liked his deep bass voice. It seemed to her that a man with a voice like that must tell the truth. She wasn't sure of this, but the longer she listened to it and the nearer it came, the less afraid she grew. She ventured the tip of her nose above the bedclothes, then her mouth, and finally her chin. By the time the group reached her side she was facing them all, in the open.

For a moment Schriftman stood over her and met her gaze. He had never felt his soul so searched as it was during the next few seconds. And yet the silent questions asked of him were simple. Gretzel sought only to know if he were a man to tell the truth and if she could trust him with her tender, sensitive body. She had fought the boarding house doctor tooth and nail from the beginning. Not only had he lied to her, but he had hurt her brutally. Now she wished to know if she must be on her guard with this other. So, for a moment her excited big eyes rested on his, which were like candles burning in a frosty room. Then quite simply and unafraid she shoved down the bedclothes and, turning over on her face, exposed her throbbing back.

Dr. Burrell caught the nurse's eye. The latter gave a gulpy sort of smile and turned away. With a grunt Schriftman bent over the thin frame. His fingers, which at times seemed endowed with five senses, played up and down her spine, to the right, to the left, then back again up and down. Though at times he stopped to probe deep, he did not hurt her much. It seemed to her that some of the strength of his broad back ran out of his finger tips and for a moment checked the biting ache which had gnawed at her for a twelvemonth. Once, at a certain spot, he made her cringe, but she understood that this was not done intentionally.

Schriftman, his brow knitted, called for Burrell's stethoscope. He placed it over Gretzel's wobbly heart and listened. Suddenly he felt his thumb in the clutch of a warm, tight grip. He found it difficult to listen after this, for the sturdy pound of his own heart became curiously intermingeled with this other jerky beat. Extricating his thumb, he glared at Burrell.

"Transfer this patient to a private ward," he ordered.

II.

IN the luxurious seclusion of a room to herself, with everything to eat that her fickle palate craved, with bright-colored German picture books to look at, with a nurse whose sole duty it was to attend to her alone, Gretzel felt like an invalid princess. But all these things were as nothing compared with the joy of the frequent visits of the big doctor himself. Had it not been for him, Gretzel would have looked with suspicion on the whole arrangement; she would have lain awake all night worrying about what might grow out of this. She had learned that every sweet was only a mask of something bitter—like her pills. Whenever anyone had been especially nice to her at home it was sure to be followed by something terrible. When her father died, her mother had brought her a doll, and when her mother died the landlady had brought her an apple.

But this was different. When she felt Schriftman's hand close over hers she knew that now no more harm could come to her. The consequent relaxation of her tense nerves brought even some surcease of pain, so that at night she frequently slept two or three hours at a time. But the best thing about these naps was the excitement of waking up and finding this shaggy-bearded Santa Claus by the side of her bed. It might be 11 at night or 2 in the morning or 4 in the morning that he came, but he always came between the dusk and the dawn. Always his greeting was the same:

"How it goes, kleines maedchen?"

Always she answered:

"I'm partickly comfy, Mister Santy."

Then he would seat himself by the bed, she would take a tight grip on his thumb, and they were off in a jiffy to some glorious German fairyland.

The wonder was where the Herr Doctor found these stories. They certainly were not in any of his scientific treatises, and he had read nothing else for 40 years.

If he made them up as he went along, then he must have had more imagination than anyone ever suspected. It was to be noted, however, that in these stories the heroine could trace her beauty, her charm, as well as the success of all her adventures, to the fact that she was particular to eat as much as possible of whatever was brought to her.

"Und so," as he informed her one night, "if you would be a princess, you must eat und you must sleep. Ach—so you will become gr-ross und r-rosy und peautiful."

"Me?" Gretzel questioned doubtfully.

She had never been ambitious in that direction.

"You are peautiful already inside," answered Schriftman. "It does not need much after that to be peautiful outside—choost some fat und some proteids."

"Sum fat an' sum protydids," murmured Gretzel, as though committing it to memory.

This was a new idea to her—this possibility of being beautiful. For herself she didn't care, but if Santy wished it, then it was worth trying for. She became a little bit jealous of these German princesses. But a new thought disturbed her.

"It's so hard to be beau-ti-ful when your back aches you," she sighed.

"Ach," replied the doctor with a frown, "dot iss true. But when we are gr-ross und are r-rosy—so perhaps the ache will go."

Gretzel quickly searched his eyes. She had been told before that this ache might go. It had always been a lie. Now Santa himself had told her. On the whole, she was sorry he had told her this. With all her confidence in him she could not believe that such a thing was possible. And if it were not possible, then—he must be like the others.

He had risen to go, and was bending over her as tenderly as a mother. She reached up a thin hand and drew down his shaggy head until her lips rested against his ear.

"I'm partickly comfy," she assured him anxiously. "Let the ache be."

He kissed her lips.

"Mein kleines maedchen," he trembled. "Ach, mein kleines maedchen."

It was 3 o'clock in the morning when he left her, but he routed Burrell out of bed and made him sit up until half-past 4, while he discussed everything under the face of the sun except that which was disturbing him. Burrell, dog-tired, listened patiently, but when Schriftman finally explained himself, he gave a start.

"Dot case in ward A," Schriftman blurted out dropping into a broad dialect, as he always did when deeply moved. "I t'ink Richards iss der man to do dot—hein?"

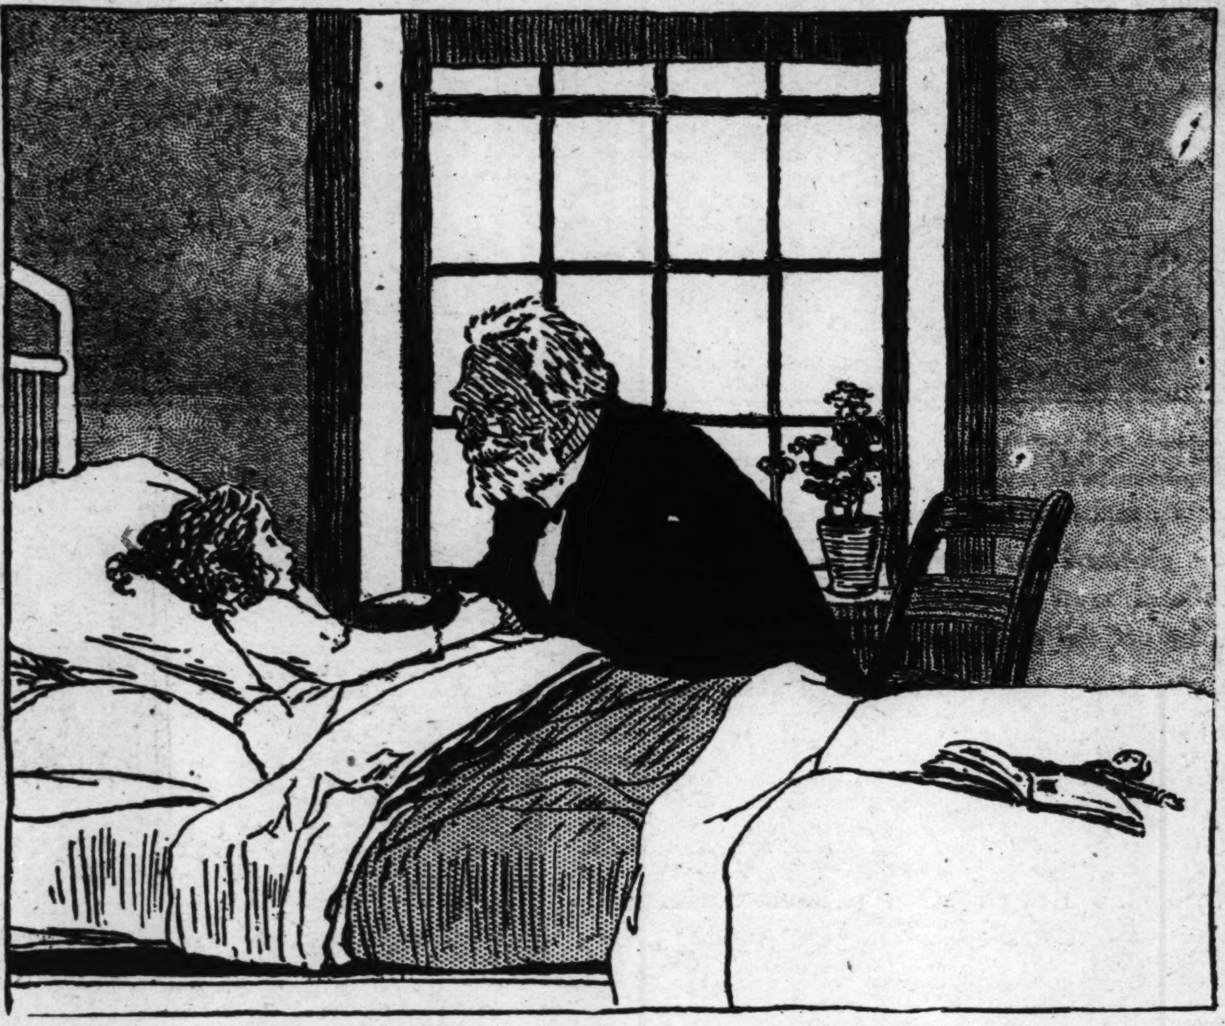
"To do Gretzel?" exclaimed Burrell.

Schriftman nodded, looking up at Burrell from beneath his wiry eyebrows.

"Why, doctor," cried Burrell, "there's just one man in the world to do that operation—and that's you!"

Schriftman's head sank.

"Richards is a great operator," admitted Burrell, "but he hasn't your nerve. And, good Lord, it's going to take a man of iron to do that operation without ether."



" 'Now,' she said firmly, 'you mus' eat an egg. So you will be gross an' rosy.' "

Schriftman winced. Burrell ran on excitedly.

"Why, you yourself said she didn't have a chance in ten, but without you—why, it wouldn't be a chance in a hundred."

Burrell was pleading. He was pleading with his heart in his plea, for he was pleading for Gretzel's life. The operation had been the talk of the hospital for three weeks. The girl's heart was too weak to stand an anesthetic, and even with local application of cocaine the operation was bound to be brutal. Everyone knew there was just one Schriftman—just one man with the brains, the hand and the nerve to do it. This wasn't a task for an ordinary surgeon; it was a task for a surgical machine. Burrell had been waking up lately in a cold sweat trying to figure out how he could avoid assisting. Without ether—good heavens! there was only one Schriftman; only one man who could keep his hand steady with Gretzel's poor body quivering beneath it.

Moreover, there wasn't another man who had the skill to give the lass even a show for her suffering. Speed is what would count, and there were no such nimble fingers in the world as Schriftman's.

Burrell was on his feet.

"Gretzel's life is literally in your hands, doctor," he exclaimed impulsively. "God give her strength to bear the ordeal."

"Amen," muttered Schriftman.

During the next few weeks Gretzel seemed actually to grow slightly plump and rosy, but almost in the same proportion Schriftman grew wan and pale. He realized that Burrell had told the truth; if the child was to have a fighting chance for life, then he must do the operation. But was it possible to make the kleines maedchen understand that what he did he did for her own dear sake? Could he make her realize that the hand she grasped so confidently would not willingly cause her brutal pain? Ach—the honest trust of those blue eyes!

III.

THERE came a morning when Gretzel was given no breakfast. She protested to the head nurse.

"Santy will be very mad on me if I don't eat my egg," she declared.

"I think he will forgive you this time, dear," answered the nurse.

"Why?" Gretzel asked pointedly.

"Because—because"——

"I ain't beautiful yet," Gretzel interrupted, with a glance at her thin arm.

The nurse threw herself on her knees by the side of the girl. She kissed that thin arm again and again.

"Yes, you are beautiful and wonderful," she half sobbed. "Don't ask me questions, Gretzel. Please don't ask me questions."

Gretzel placed her hands on the nurse's head. She didn't like to see anyone worried. And because, here, she herself seemed always to be the cause of worry she answered reassuringly the only comforting thing she could think of:

"I'm partickly comfy."

Whereupon the nurse rose swiftly and hurried out of the room.

Santy favored Gretzel with an unexpected visit this same morning. He came in shortly after the nurse had left, and Gretzel explained to him at once that she had not had her egg.

"So?" Schriftman answered nervously.

He seated himself on the edge of the bed. He placed his hand firmly on her shoulder.

"Kleines maedchen," he faltered, "if you were mein own kleines maedchen I could not loff you more."

She put her arms around his neck.

"Dear, dear Santy," she cooed.

"So," he said, "so you must neffer forget dot."

He drew a little away from her. What he had to say he said looking fair into her blue eyes.

"Today," he said, "we must make der ache go—poof—foreffer!"

He snapped his fingers.

"The ache?" she questioned a[illegible]ously.

"Foreffer," he assured her. "Un[illegible] it hurts you when it iss going"——

She smiled up into his face. She grasped his thumb.

"I ain't skeered of bein' hurted with you, I guess."

He held his breath a moment. He could not say any more after that.

So it was Burrell who was forced to prepare the maid for what was to be done. He did it as well as he knew how, but he made a bungling job of it. He left her gasping for breath with all the old fear in her eyes. The thing she could not understand was what had become of Santy. She called for him again and again. The best Burrell could think of to tell her was that the Herr Doctor had gone to save a little girl from death and that he would come back as soon as he could.

Schriftman was depending upon the disguise of his operating robes to prevent Gretzel from recognizing him. But he had forgotten to reckon with the fact that she might wonder at his apparent desertion of her at this the gravest crisis in her life. Burrell's explanation did not help very much. When they lifted her gently to the stretcher and carried her through the corridors to the high-vaulted amphitheater, Santy was nowhere to be seen. Pale, dumb, dazed, Gretzel looked everywhere for him in vain.

Burrell in an ante-room assisted Schriftman into his sterilized surplice. He adjusted the mask over the surgeon's beard and the white cap over his hair, leaving only his eyes exposed. Then he helped him into his rubber gloves. He himself was white and loose in all his joints, but Schriftman, though white, was like a marble statue. He was rigid and inhumanly cold. He moved about with the quick certainty of motion of an automaton. He gave his orders in a voice that clicked like an instrument. Burrell could not help admiring such self-control, but at the same time it made him shudder.

When all was ready Schriftman walked noiselessly into the amphitheater. Gretzel was lying face down with an interne stationed at either side of her head. A nurse stood ready near the glittering array of instruments. Schriftman scarcely breathed as he approached, but he had no sooner reached the girl's side than she forced up her head. For a heartbeat she stared wildly at the sheeted figure. Then she gave a glad, confident cry:

"Santy!" Santy!"

Schriftman, without replying, nodded a signal, and the internes gently forced Gretzel back again. But Burrell slumped to the floor like an empty grain sack and was of no more use to anyone.

For 24 hours after the operation Schriftman sat outside Gretzel's door and received five-minute reports on her condition. Then when he realized that she bade fair to tide over the first terrible shock, he returned to his lonely room and slept. He was exhausted as he had never before been, and when he woke up he was still exhausted. Something seemed to have gone from him. He made his morning hospital visit to everyone except Gretzel, but his mind was loose and vague. So a week passed, and they told him that, while the maid was free from pain and was making a good recovery, she shrank from everyone who approached her.

"Und she neffer asks for Santy—hein?" he questioned the nurse.

The nurse lowered her eyes.

"No," she admitted gently.

He waited another week, with the success of his wonderful operation his only consolation. There was no doubt now but that in time Gretzel would really be as gross and rosy as any of the princesses he had pictured to her. For a long time yet he must watch that weak heart to be sure, but with care and patience much might be done even with that. If only she would let him, he would make that his life work. He wanted to make her his legal daughter; he wanted to buy her a little house in the country and take her there; he wanted to make her a real fairyland princess.

"Und she never asks yet for Santy—hein?"

"No," answered the nurse.

"So," he murmured, turning away his head. He waited a moment. Then he asked:

"You speak sometimes off me?"

"Yes," answered the nurse.

He did not press her further, and so she was saved from telling him that at the mere mention of his name the maid shrank away in terror.

Schriftman waited until Gretzel's temperature was normal—until for the first time in her life she slept soundly through the night. He himself had been sleeping less than one hour in the 24. His clothes hung pitifully loose about his once firm body. As Burrell said, he was proving the truth of his own epigram: His love was costing him much—too much.

There came a day when Schriftman could stand it no longer; when he could fight himself no longer. He stole to the door of Gretzel's room while she was at breakfast. The nurse had seen him coming and was running down the corridor as fast as she could run. She heard the maid's shriek of terror, and forced both hands over her eyes.

Shriftman clutched at his heart. He grew 10 years older in a minute as he saw the girl shrink away. She did not cry out again, but kept her head hidden beneath the bedclothes.

"Kleines maedchen," he trembled. "Don't do dot. See, I vill go! I vill go und neffer again vill I scare you!"

She did not move.

"Goodpy, kleines maedchen." He trembled. "Goodpy, leedle princess."

As he backed toward the door there was something in his voice that made Gretzel peek out over the bedclothes. The detail that riveted her attention was his wasted form. He looked to her as though he had been sick. It recalled to her all the misery of her own long sickness — all the ache of those long nights now gone forever. She saw pain written in his eyes, and she who knew so well the horror of pain suddenly forgot in her wider sympathy all her personal fears of the man. Her little mother's heart grew big with pity. With her own ache gone and the ache in him so manifest, she felt the stronger of the two. There was no longer any reason why she should be afraid of him. It was he who looked afraid.

She sat up in bed and studied him a moment as he cowed away from her. Then she reached for her egg.

"Santy," she said, "come here."

Like a blind man, he obeyed.

"Now," she said firmly, "you mus' eat an egg. So you will be gross an' rosy."

Schriftman does not operate any more; he is too busy obeying his daughter's orders, for one thing. But he does lecture, and last year he concluded his speech to the senior medical class with these words:

"It costs much to love, ach, yes, but—not too much."

The Submarine's Enormous Toll

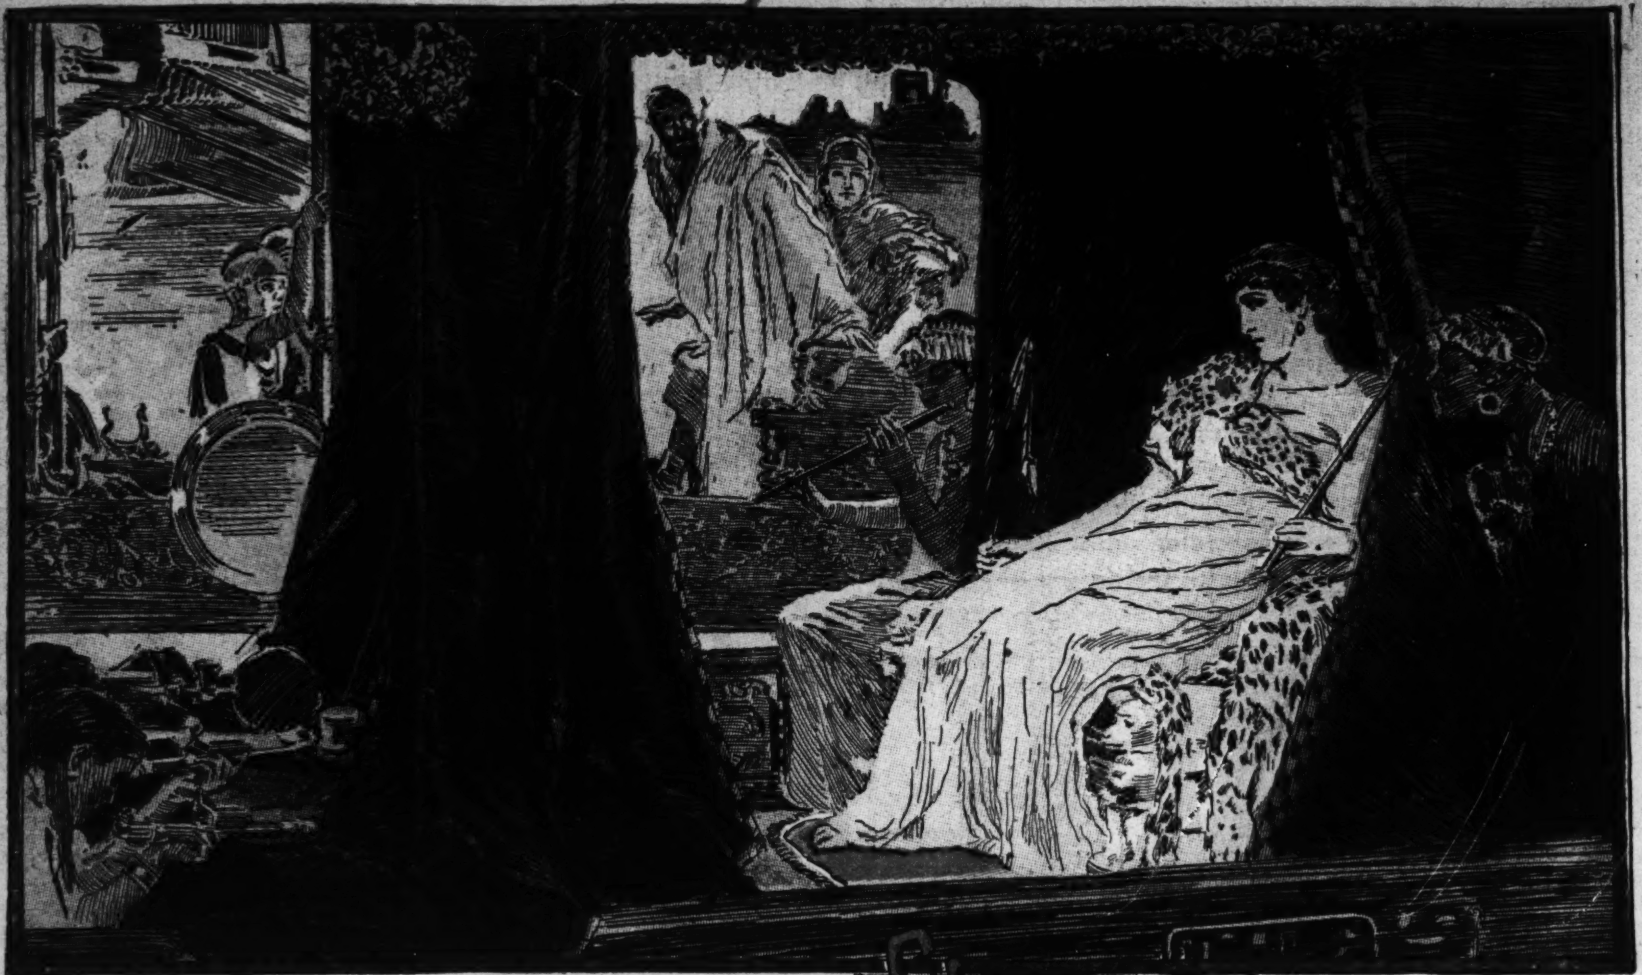
As a matter of fact there is little excuse for that tragedy except that they did not have sufficient aircraft to afford protection for ships under all conditions, which is undoubtedly the reason proper aerial protection to shipping near the British coast has not been provided, as it has in the Black Sea.

"When the need of aerial protection far from the coast became evident, the Russian authorities took the two fast steamers built for the trade between Odessa and Egypt, fitted them with false deck fore and aft for launching and receiving aeroplanes, and sent the two ships with seven aeroplanes each, to afford the aerial protection needed. These steamers are capable of a speed of 20 knots an hour and seven aeroplanes can be snugly accommodated on each. The machines are lanched by lowering them to the water with cranes, and taken aboard the same way. After a little practice, this can be done very quickly. I saw seven aeroplanes launched and in flight 14 minutes after the order was given.

"On one occasion, when the Russian fleet bombarded the Bosphorus, six aeroplanes, each equipped with two 40-pound bombs, were launched within fifteen minutes from one of the aeroplane ships. Forty minutes later they commenced to return to the ship for more bombs. They landed on the lee side of the ship, took their loads—a bomb on either side of the machine, connected to the releasing device—and soared aloft."

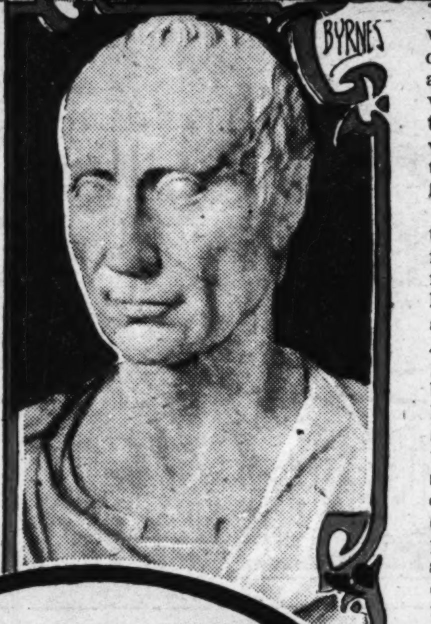
The Real Truth About Cleopatra



The meeting of Antony and Cleopatra on the River Cydnus, B. C. 41. From a photograph by the Berlin Photographic Company after the painting by Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema.

Ancient Queen pictured for two thousand years as cruel murderess and most immoral of women is vindicated by official of Egyptian Government

CLEOPATRA, for two thousand years pictured as the most wicked woman of any age, has at last been vindicated and what is declared to have been her true character is revealed to the world. No longer will the much-maligned Queen of Egypt be regarded by careful students of history as the treacherous, murderous and licentious Siren of the Nile, but as a mother whose one purpose in life was to insure a great future for her son. Instead of the immoral mistress, she is to be regarded as a loyal wife. No longer is she to be looked upon as a corrupt woman seeking only pleasure, but as a Queen who was guided by lofty ideals and worthy ambitions.



JULIUS CAESAR.

This change in the status of Cleopatra twenty centuries after her tragic death by her own hand, after her dream of a world wide empire, ruled over by her son, had finally been banished by the treachery of her army, is brought about as a result of the investigations of Arthur E. P. Brome Weigall, instructor-general of antiquities, Government of Egypt.

Mr. Weigall has written in a very fascinating manner a new story of the life of Cleopatra, and her relationship with the great Julius Caesar and later with that picturesque Roman soldier and orator, Mark Antony, are placed in an entirely new light. The book, which was published recently by William Blackwood and Sons of Edinburgh and London, is called "The Life and Times of Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt."

The early histories of Cleopatra's life were all penned by Romans. Rome at that period was very bitter towards Cleopatra and Antony. Their biographies were written by enemies, and later historians based their works largely upon the records of these early writers.

Cleopatra was not an Egyptian. There was nothing but pure Greek blood in her veins, though for years her family, the famous House of Ptolemy, of which she was the last sovereign, had ruled Egypt.

Cleopatra is pictured by Weigall as a small, delicate and very beautiful woman. He says that it is not improbable that she had light hair and blue eyes. In her youth she was undoubtedly very spirited, and through life she exhibited a daring which must be admired. She was also brilliant, for mere beauty could hardly have held the affections of such a man as Julius Caesar for any considerable length of time.

The reader, to agree with the author's opinion of the character of this fascinating Queen, must refrain from judging her acts by the twentieth century standards of morality. He must go back to the age in which she lived, an age when murder, if it was committed to further one's rightful claims to a throne or one's honorable political ambitions, was not looked upon as a crime. It must also be remembered that at the time Cleopatra lived and reigned both Alexandria and Rome, the two great centers of civilization, were also the centers of every form of immorality. While Mr. Weigall admits many of the offenses that were charged to Cleopatra, he shows that behind them were motives, which, according to the standards of the age, justified them to a very large extent.

Instead of the designing woman of the East, who by her charms and intrigue caused the great Caesar to forget his duties to his country and leave Rome to its fate while he lived a life of luxurious immorality at Alexandria, the reader of Mr. Weigall's book sees an innocent and beautiful girl, a girl who has never had a love affair, led astray by the great soldier. Caesar at this time was more than 50 years of age, but he still retained much of the appearance of youth. He was always a most careful dresser and his personal appearance, to say nothing of his power as ruler of the Roman Empire, had caused many women with much more experience than the youthful Cleopatra to fall. In fact, his reputation was such in Rome that, Weigall says, it was customary for every husband among the upper class who desired to obtain a divorce to name Caesar as corespondent.

CLEOPATRA.

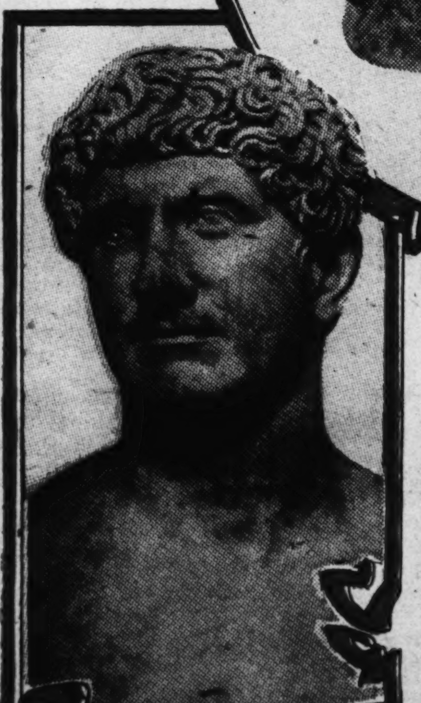
After Caesar had visited Alexandria and become the supporter of Cleopatra in the almost hopeless fight she was waging with her brother for possession of the Egyptian throne, it is not strange, Weigall points out, that she should have fallen in love with him. And her actions throughout her whole life would indicate that this love was deep and lasting.

From Weigall's book it is seen that while Cleopatra was never recognized in Rome as Caesar's wife and although the Roman Senate did not recognize their son, the great conqueror was generally accepted in Egypt as her husband and legal consort. Cleopatra herself always looked upon Caesar as her husband and it seems probable that had he lived a few weeks longer he would have been legally married to her in Rome.

According to Weigall there is no evidence to show that Cleopatra ever had more than two love affairs, the first with Caesar and the second with Antony, and there seems to be no doubt about her actual marriage to the latter.

Ancient and more modern writers have declared that after Caesar had ended the war between Cleopatra and her brother and securely established her upon the throne of Egypt, he spent many months in Alexandria, living a riotous existence with the young Queen, and forgetting his duties as the Dictator of Rome. Weigall, however, says that Caesar was playing very good politics in remaining away from Rome, where political conditions were such that the time was not ripe for his triumphal entry into the city. He had been in Alexandria for several months before his soldiers finally won the victory over the forces of Cleopatra's young brother, and the Queen had already been recognized by her people as his wife. She was about to become a mother, and Weigall says that it seems that Caesar had a real love for her that caused him to wish to remain by her side until the child was born.



ANTONY.

A few months later when Cleopatra was summoned to Rome to witness the triumph of Caesar, she went fully expecting to be recognized as Caesar's wife, and from Weigall's history it would seem that Caesar was desirous of making such an announcement, but he had one wife in Rome, and his power was not at that time so thoroughly established that he could

"WHY FEAR DEATH? IT IS THE MOST BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURE IN LIFE"

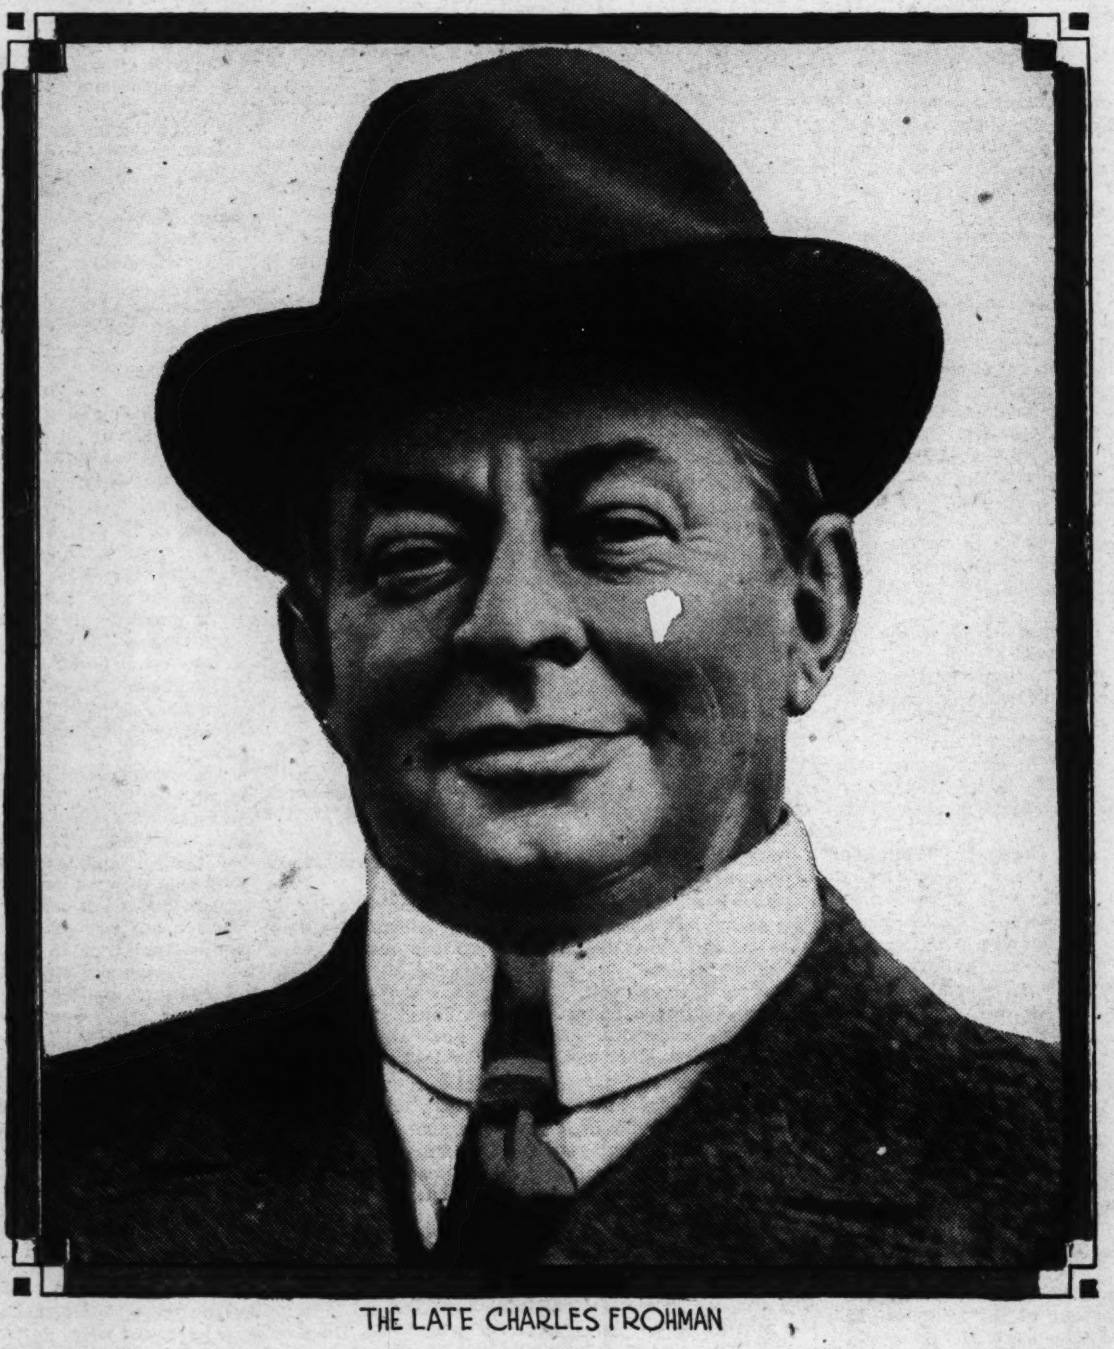
THE FROHMAN THE WORLD DID NOT KNOW

CHARLES FROHMAN was the most talked of but the least known man of prominence in America. It is doubtful if he was known by sight by one person out of 10,000 right in New York City. For while Charles Frohman as an institution was known and felt—not only in the United States and Canada, but throughout Europe—Charles Frohman the individual was to the great majority of actors, to say nothing of the general public, something of a myth. When he spoke for publication it was nearly always through an assistant; when he made a speech in answer to a curtain call it was always through a star or stage manager. His photograph has only recently appeared in magazines, newspapers or public prints of any kind. His death on the Lusitania cost America its premier theatrical producer.

Personality of America's foremost theatrical manager, a recluse who attended "first nights" by sitting in the gallery, who never owned an automobile, never appeared before the curtain, never signed contracts and always regarded all his stars as his children :: :: :: ::

CHARLES FROHMAN was rarely to be seen at first nights even in his own theaters. He usually sat in the last row of the balcony or even in the gallery of his playhouses on such occasions. Between the acts or after the play was over he would go to the dressing room of the star, knock on the door and whisper "It's all right. I'm sure it's all right," and hurry away. Nothing would ever induce him to appear before the curtain. He rarely visited Broadway restaurants after the theater. He was particularly fond of two things—the hot biscuits that were baked at Childs' restaurant and lobster fat. After attending a theatrical performance—he made it a point to visit all the important plays on the boards—he would go to Childs' and feast on an order of hot biscuits and coffee. Or if such a supper did not appeal to him he would drop into an obscure corner at Jack's and have a dish of lobster fat. John D. Williams, Paul Potter or one of his many playwright friends usually accompanied him. Most of his European playwrights visited him in New York during the season and he delighted in taking them around.

Strange as it may seem C. F. did not own an automobile. He disliked to ride in one and it took considerable effort on the part of his friends to get him into a taxi. He used to walk to and from the Hotel Knickerbocker and his office and to most of the nearby theaters where rehearsals were held. In the early fall of the year when he was busy rehearsing five or six productions he would hurry around from one rehearsal to another. His comings and goings were so frequent and so unexpected that the door tenders often spoke of him as the "to-and-fro-man."



THE LATE CHARLES FROHMAN

Very few New Yorkers, even close friends of Charles Frohman, knew that he maintained two apartments in New York. Yet such was the case for many years. In addition to his apartments at the Hotel Knickerbocker he had a suite of rooms at the Hotel Brevoort. And when he wanted to escape from everyone in order to rest or work out some problem by himself he used to repair to the Hotel Brevoort on lower Fifth avenue, far from the theater zone, where he was safe from interruption.

Even at the Hotel Knickerbocker he was protected from ordinary interruption. The hotel had a list of the names of a favored few who were permitted to go upstairs to his apartment. Anyone else who called, was always told that Mr. Frohman was not at home. One day a would-be caller, who insisted that Mr. Frohman was in the hotel, asked the clerk to have him paged. The clerk, a newcomer, sent a boy about the hotel calling "Mr. Frohman, Mr. Charles Frohman." It happened that C. F. was dining in an obscure corner of the grill at the time and heard his name. However, he did not call the boy and see his visitor. When he finished his dinner he went to Manager Regan and informed him that a repetition of the episode would mean his removal to another hotel.

The Savoy Hotel, where Mr. Frohman lived when in London, had the same instructions. And once when the hotel management disobeyed his requests he moved out and did not return until the following season.

Perhaps the most interesting sidelights on the character of Charles Frohman are shown by his relations with his stars—especially his women stars.

When it came to engaging an actress for a star part or creating a star out of one of his favorite players he nearly always mixed sentiment with business. It is generally known that he had few written contracts with them. When they accepted the salary he suggested the matter was closed, for Charles Frohman's word was as good as his bond.

But what the theater-going public does not know is the peculiarly intimate relations he enjoyed with most of his women stars. He looked upon them as his children. When they were playing in New York he expected them to drop into his office at least three or four times a week for a brief chat. He invited all their little confidences. If they needed money he told them to go to his cashier and draw what they wanted. When they were on the road he used to receive daily telegrams from them. These messages were all placed on his desk at the Empire Theater every morning and before he began his day's work he read and answered them.

A sentimental bond existed between each one of them and himself. When Miss Billie Burke, who was one of his greatest favorites, married Flo Ziegfeld, he was terribly upset. For a long time their personal relations were severed. Her telegram: "Forgive me, I couldn't help it," remained unanswered for many days. Then, one day, she came to his office to see him on a matter of business. The meeting caused tears to flow from both manager and star. There was a reconciliation and an understanding that Miss Burke would continue to appear under his direction for another five years.

His peculiar sensitiveness was shown by his relations with Miss Martha Hedman, the beautiful Swedish actress whom he brought to America a few seasons ago. When the play in which he starred her last fall failed to draw audiences in paying numbers he made her leading woman in John Drew's company. The Drew company, however, had a long season of one-night stands, which were not to Miss Hedman's liking. And because she felt she had not been justly dealt with she did not pay her customary visits to C. F. when the Drew company came back to New York to lay over until after the Christmas holidays. C. F. was so put out about her seeming neglect that when the Drew company resumed its tour another actress was given her part. Miss Hedman then felt free to accept an engagement with another manager, which she did. However, the play was not a success and when its run was ended she visited the Empire Theater to see Alf Hayman on a private matter. C. F., who was in his office, heard she was in the building and sent for her. When she entered his office he upbraided her gently for neglecting him. When she explained her point of view he burst into tears. Miss Hedman was so affected that she, too, burst into tears, and the result of their meeting was a reconciliation which resulted in an important engagement for next season.

Charles Frohman rarely lost his temper. When people offended him he used to get up and leave them. He only argued up to a certain point. And once he left an office or a rehearsal after a disagreement, it took oxen and wain rope to draw him back.

A couple of seasons ago he produced a play called "Indian Summer" by Augustus Thomas. During the final rehearsals in Buffalo he and Thomas got into an argument over certain lines which Mr. Frohman thought ought to be eliminated. Thomas pleaded to have them left in the play and John Mason, the star, sided with Thomas. C. F. pointed out that he had been producing plays for twenty-five years and that he knew what he wanted. However, Thomas was obdurate and Mason was so insistent that C. F. left the rehearsal and returned immediately to New York without waiting to see the opening performance. The play was scheduled to come into New York the following week, but C. F. could not be coaxed to attend the final dress rehearsal or even the "first night" performance. As it happened the play was not well received by the critics. They complained that it was too talky, just

THE TURBULENT DUCHESS . . .

A Tale of Romance and Adventure

By Percy J. Brebner

SYNOPSIS.

SANDRA OF PODINA is known all over Europe as "the turbulent Duchess," because of her "devil's own temper." Her country is coveted by the Elector of Brandenburg, who is building up his duchy into the Kingdom of Prussia. Her court fool has died, and she chooses as his successor the younger of a pair of vagabonds, who recommends himself by his gallantry and wit. He takes the name of Bergolet. He learns that the marriage of the Duchess has become an affair of statecraft, and that a dozen Princes are suitors for her hand. Of these the favorite seems to be her cousin, Karl, and the least favored is the "black sheep," Maurice of Savaria. A mysterious woman, in the guise of a fortune teller, holds an interview with Bergolet, in the midst of which soldiers arrive to arrest him on Prince Karl's order. They escape through a secret passage into the Burgomaster's house and overhear conspirators planning to kidnap the Duchess. Bergolet, on the way home, is struck down and captured, but he escapes, rides into the forest and arrives in the nick of time to warn the Duchess of treachery. Returning, they met the Elector and his suite, going on a visit to Metzburg. Karl, to test Bergolet, pretends to give him a fencing lesson, and is satisfied the jester has a mortal terror of a sword. The jester is arrested and then released by his wayward mistress.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Secret League.

BERGOLET stood by the table looking at the open door through which the Duchess had passed. He was no longer a prisoner, and tonight the Duchess expected to find the fool behind her chair. For a little while she had encouraged him to be only a man, but when he spoke as a man she could see nothing but presumption in him. He had not expected such treatment. Though the Duchess might speak, he had looked for the woman to peep from her eyes, and had looked in vain. He picked up his cap, put it on firmly, and shook his head to make the bells ring, as though he would forcibly remind himself what it was he wore; then he took up the bauble and laid it across his arm, but he did not speak to his little friend, nor was there the shadow of a smile upon his face. It was a serious and depressed looking jester who stood by the table waiting for Saxe's return.

That afternoon found them in a wine cellar, the jester without his cap and bauble and wrapped in a cloak to conceal his dress; Saxe stern of face as a man who faces a difficulty but fears the worst. It was a poor place, dark, ill-ventilated, pungent with the fumes of stale liquor, but it was in a narrow, unfrequented street, and a man could slip in and out of it without attracting attention. There were corners in it, too, where round an old stained table men could talk over their wine and not be afraid of eavesdroppers.

"Wine, the best you have," said Saxe to the proprietor. "I entertain friends. When they come see to it that we are not disturbed."

The guests came singly, all men of the Guard, and as each one came to the table Saxe poured him out a liberal measure of wine.

"Drink, comrade. We'll to business when the others join us."

Then came Gustave whistling a stave, and a few moments afterwards the great form of Hans filled the doorway.

"We are complete," said Saxe, handing him wine as he reached the table.

As he drank he looked round upon his companions for indorsement of this statement. The light in the cellar was dim, and he had finished his wine with an appreciative smack of his lips before he noticed the figure in the corner. Bergolet had let his cloak fall apart to show his dress of green and scarlet.

"By thunder, I've an account to settle with one of this company!" Hans exclaimed.

"This way. I'm sorry."

The jester stood up and stretched out his hand, but the trooper shook his head.

"It's not a debt that words can pay. There's still a drumming in my brain, and I carry a mark that will spoil my beauty for some time to come. And that's not the worst of it; there's the being laughed at that a man like me should be beaten by a fool like you."

"Aye, we did laugh," said Gustav.

"And I'm not built to be laughed at," said Hans. "It's payment in kind that I'm looking for, not in words."

"This is part of the business which brings us here," and Saxe poured out more wine. "Let us sit. Come, Master Jester, what have you to say to Comrade Hans?"

"He is generally a coward who hides behind an apology," said Bergolet.

"That's plain speech and true," returned Hans.

"Would you call me a coward?" the jester asked.

The trooper rubbed his chin reflectively.

"You're more a liar than a coward. You fooled me into thinking you an idiot, without sense, without memory. You got at the softness in me, and when I turned away, pitying you, you struck me down with that infernal sling of yours."

"To save the Duchess," said Bergolet. "You know now what her danger was. Had I told you then, would you have believed me and let me go? Of course you would not. You believed you were my jailer by her command. Had I attacked you man to man"——

"It would have been a very different matter," said Hans, squaring his shoulders to emphasize his strength. "I warrant you'd be still abed and still repenting your foolishness."

There was a laugh at this sally, and then Bergolet leaned across the table. He had bared his right arm to the shoulder, and now bent it slowly that his companions might see the play of the hard muscles.

"I have known quite big men to treat that arm with respect," he said. "You might have held me, Hans, but you would have had no babe to battle with."

"It's wonderful development for a fool," Gustav remarked after a pause.

"Good enough to make a man fight squarely," said Hans, "and you didn't."

"How could I know you were alone in the house?" Bergolet asked. "I was thinking of the Duchess. You would have done as I did for the sake of the Duchess."

"Not then, but I would now," said Hans in a burst of confidence. "Why, this morning she had me to talk with her—about you it was, Master Jester—and I was talking to her as easy as if she weren't a Duchess, but just a woman. I'd do a great deal for the woman who talked with me this morning."

"So we stand together on common ground, Hans," said the jester. "The Duchess is in danger still, as Saxe here will tell us. When she is out of danger we'll face each other for a bout if you will, but until then"——

The trooper looked at the outstretched hand for a moment, then took it.

"I bear no malice, Master Jester. With an arm like yours there must be times when a fool's got other uses than being laughed at. We'll have that bout later, and when you're laid by for a few days you must remember it's the result of a friendly fight and has no malice in it. What's this about the Duchess being in danger?"

It was Saxe who told the story, and he was careful to leave much unsaid. The facts he emphasized were those which would appeal to Hans, and the truth of which Hans could vouch for to his companions. Bergolet's arrest had not been ordered by the Duchess that night; therefore, someone had treacherously used her name. Had it not been for the jester's timely warning, Her Grace would have been captured in the forest. Not only robbers had been bribed to the deed, but it was almost certain that the escort had been bribed not to fight.

"I can make no definite accusation, or we'd have the scoundrels by the heels," said Saxe; "but while they are at large the Duchess is in danger.

"I've noted whispering and discontent in the Guard," said Hans.

"So have I," Saxe answered. "That is why we are here, six men of the Guard who love the Duchess. Are we prepared to defend her with our lives if necessary?"

"Aye," came the quiet answer.

"Show us the way, Capt. Saxe, and to defend her we'll cut through though all the Guard prove traitors," said Gustav.

"Bravely said," and Hans brought his hand down heavily on his comrade's shoulder. "That's the spirit. I swear it shall be death to the man who says a word against her in my hearing."

"It is more than words I am afraid of," said Saxe. "That is why I would bind to me a few true men. It falls out fortunately that I have been made an officer, it gives me some power in setting the sentries, and I shall so arrange that we six may be in easy call of one another. We are six men, a secret league, sworn to protect our lady, the Duchess."

"And the jester there?" queried Hans.

"He's no fighting man," laughed a trooper. "It went all around the drill yard this morning that Prince Karl had tried to teach him sword play and that he was afraid of the naked weapon."

"It's a pity; with such an arm, too," Hans murmured.

Bergolet did not move.

"We are six fighting men and a fool," said Saxe. "The fool is sharp enough to hear many things not intended for his ears as he stands behind the Duchess' chair. He will be useful to bring us news. Is it a solemn oath between us?"

Hands shot out across the table and were firm-clasped in the center.

"May heaven's curse light on the man who breaks this oath," said Saxe solemnly. Then pouring out more wine he stood to the salute. "To our mistress, Her Grace of Podina."

The toast was drunk.

"We look to you for orders, Capt. Saxe," said Hans.

"Thanks, comrades. Leave as you came, singly. Metzburg must know nothing of the league."

That night Saxe set the sentries and no one noted anything strange in his arrangement. Passing him, Prince Karl smiled a little contemptuously at the trooper turned officer, but saw no powerful enemy in him, nor did it interest him what men stood on guard. He was holding the threads of a scheme which should shake Europe, and was not concerned with small matters. Only Bertha von Lehmann troubled him, and it would have astonished the Prince could he have known that the same woman was uppermost in the thoughts of the man he passed so contemptuously.

And that night Bergolet stood behind the Duchess' chair. She glanced at him, the interview of the morning evidently in her mind, but the moment he essayed to jest she silenced him. She was not in the mood to be merry, and the fact astonished her, for she had passed a dull day. More than once in it she would have welcomed Bergolet's coming; indeed, she had almost sent for him. The Elector had not required much entertaining, but Baron Kevenfelt had wearied her with a long explanation of his plans for the feast of St. Winifried. Before she could change her mind he had taken advantage of her permission to make what arrangements he deemed best, and had handed her a paper containing the names of the guests who had been invited to Metzburg. She took the paper, but had not opened it even when the Baron had bowed himself out, well satisfied with what he had accomplished.

She withdrew to her own apartments early tonight. She wanted no song. She did not want her jester, but she took Bertha von Lehmann with her, to the disappointment of Prince Karl and Saxe. The Prince invited the Marquis de Vannes to cards after cursing the Burgomaster's niece underneath his breath, but Saxe waited, hoping to see Bertha when she left the Duchess.

He did not see her that night, nor could he get speech with her the next day, but on the following morning he saw her give a message to a page.

"Mistress, when can I speak with you?"

"Why, now—Capt. Saxe," and she dropped him a little curtsey.

"It is important and secret. The retired alley where we first met would be a convenient place."

"Is it as important as that?" she asked.

"Will you come?"

"At sundown," she answered. "It is condescension, Captain, but not quite such condescension as when I invited a trooper to walk with me."

"And for all his rough exterior put pride in his heart, mistress," was the answer.

She laughed and he wondered whether he had made a very clumsy compliment.

It never occurred to Saxe to wonder if she would keep the appointment, and this trust in her promise was a clear indication that she was not quite as other women to him. He was conscious of looking forward to the hour of sunset.

"Mistress, I have been here only a few minutes, yet the waiting has seemed long," he said.

It had troubled him how he should commence to play at being in love with her, but these first words came quite easily, and no conscience of lying pricked him.

"You astonish me. I thought women had no interest for you."

"I thought so, too," he answered. "I was mistaken."

"It is a pretty compliment. But for the failing light you would note my blushes.

"I'm not good at compliments," said Saxe. "What I say is true. You said the other day that some woman must have treated me badly to make me despise women so much. You were right. Another woman may easily alter my opinion."

"Was it only to tell me this that you made me promise to come here?"

"No."

"I am staying only a few moments," she said; "you would do wisely to come to the important matter at once."

"That you should not misunderstand me seems the most important matter now," Saxe answered. "You see how far I have traveled since the other day."

"I understand. Now tell me the real purpose of our meeting."

"Mistress, you make it difficult. I came for one purpose; but your presence gives me another, and between the two my courage fails me."

She paced slowly beside him in silence for a few moments.

"I will try and help you," she said. "You are curious to know why I am in Metzburg, what knowledge of affairs lies behind this pretty face of mine—we decided that it was pretty, didn't we?"

"You must pardon my former insolence, mistress."

"And to gain your end it seemed to you a good plan to alter your opinion of me, to simulate a new-born reverance for my sex and play the lover with me."

Saxe did not answer.

"Or perhaps it was not your idea, but another's. Your kinsman, Bergolet, perchance suggested this means to the end. The scheme savors of his fertile brain."

"Bergolet is"——

"Is only a jester," said Bertha quickly, "and I fancy Capt. Saxe is rather too honest a man to be altogether mean."

"Bergolet is honest, too; I would not have you think ill of him," Saxe returned. "You have hit the truth, mistress. We are men, Bergolet and I, and we argue after our kind. Flatter a woman sufficiently by giving her homage and love, and you will learn her secrets. It is true in most cases. Many women have done their part in making it safe for men to argue in this fashion. Not for our own ends, but for the sake of others, it seemed necessary to understand your secret. I undertook to play the mean part willingly—no, hear me to the end—willingly, because I wanted again to talk alone with you. The reason—I could not have told myself the reason until I saw you coming to me just now. Then I knew. I knew there was one woman in whom my interest was great. Believe me, mistress, all I have said to you today is true, all of it."

"Capt. Saxe, why is it so necessary you should learn my secret?"

He looked into her eyes steadily.

"Dare I trust you?"

"It is a strange question after what you have said," she answered.

"And much is at stake," he returned.

"You may trust me, Capt. Saxe, in the same measure as you trust your own honesty. You tell me that what you have said today is true, all of it; judge of my honesty by your own truth."

"Mistress, you know that the Duchess has just passed through a grave danger, saved by the jester. She is still in danger, though what her exact perils are I cannot tell. Only this I know, that the Guard is not to be trusted. There are whisperings and discontent. The men are ripe to be used against Her Grace by her enemies. Who those enemies are I can only guess. Can you tell me?"

"No."

"I will tell you more, judging you always by my own honesty, remember," Saxe went on. "There is a little band sworn to protect the Duchess with their lives. It is a secret band of men who are ready to obey me. Such men do not swear an oath together unless they are sure of danger."

"Is there room in such a band for a woman?"

"For you, yes."

"Capt. Saxe, you and the jester have a secret, what is it?"

The Turbulent Duchess (Continued)

"You told Bergolet you knew it. You were two of a trade, you said."

"Yes, but I am not sure that I was right. Will you tell me the secret?"

"I cannot; it must be kept in the Duchess' interests. This much I swear, heart and soul we are both bound to Her Grace."

"So am I," Bertha answered, "and I cannot tell my secret for the same reason. But I am one with you in all you do for Her Grace's safety. I am as ready to obey Capt. Saxe in this matter as is any man in his band."

"Mistress, I thank you."

"But you are not satisfied?"

"Your secret might be of much service to us," said Saxe.

"It would not help you," she answered. "I will tell you this, chiefly it is a personal matter, of no moment to anyone but myself."

"I must be content, although I have achieved nothing," he returned.

"You may have achieved more than you imagine, Capt. Saxe. I know you for an honest man. I think you are my friend, and I may sorely need a friend presently."

"You may command me, mistress."

"I shall remember, but I have also said you may command me. Is there anything that I may do?"

"At the moment, no, but"——

"If you will, I can come to this alley at sunset for a moment just to learn if you have any commands."

"I shall wait here every sunset," he said.

"And be watchful lest we are spied upon," she laughed. "We have both become more important since we walked here last."

She turned and left him, quickly disappearing from his sight at a turn in the alley. She was a born coquette, yet this triumph over a woman-hater gave her no satisfaction. Two thoughts were in her mind as she hurried away. What was the special danger which threatened the Duchess? and what kind of woman was she who had treated Capt. Saxe so badly?

She was crossing the courtyard when a man came out from the shadows.

"Fraulein, your uncle, the Burgomaster"——

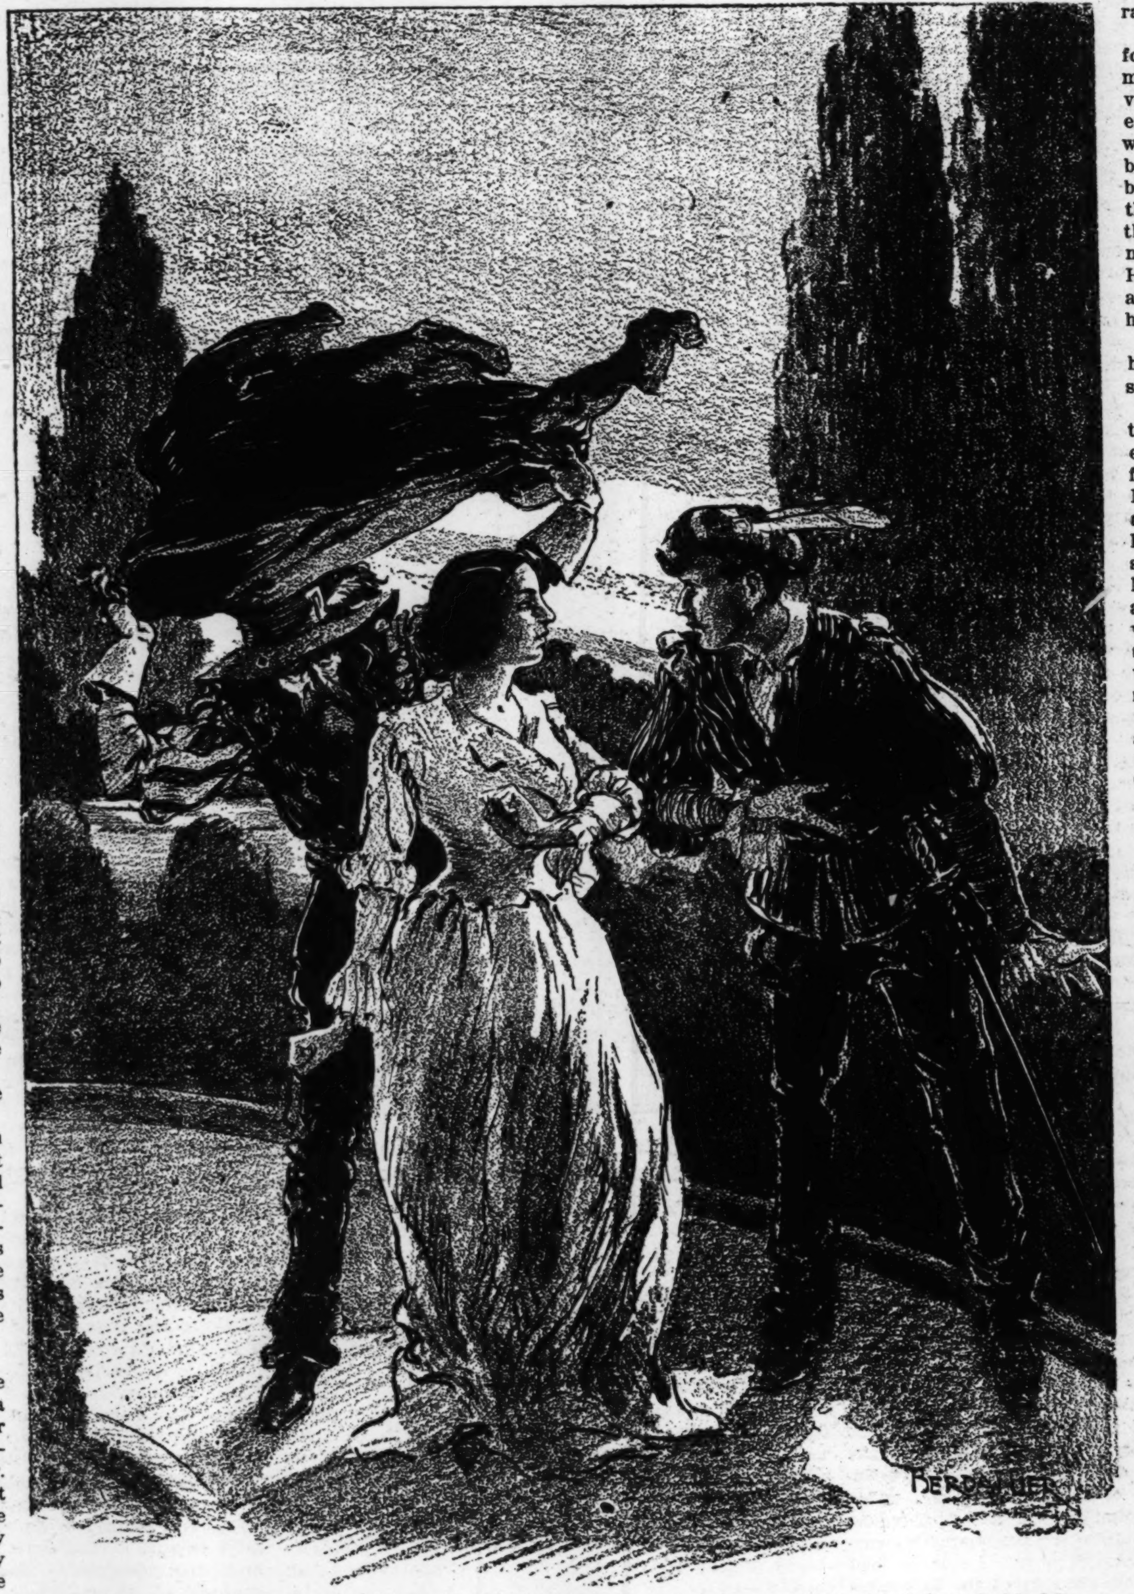
"I have already sent him word today that it is not convenient to visit him until tomorrow or the day following. That is again my answer. He is not so ill as his other messenger would have me believe, for I hear he was abroad in the market place today."

"Fraulein"——

She moved to pass the man, but as she did so a cloak was thrown over her head from behind and powerful arms were about her. She cried out once, but it was a feeble cry, for the cloak was thick and tightly held. She could not cry again, there was no air, she was being suffocated. She would not be in the alley tomorrow at sunset. It was her last thought as she slipped into unconsciousness.

"Wait," whispered one of the men to his companions. "Wait until he has gone. Grip her throat hard if she seems likely to cry out."

Saxe heard no cry. For a few moments he stood looking along the path by which she had gone.



"She moved to pass the man, but as she did so a cloak was thrown over her head from behind."

CHAPTER XVII.

Prince Karl Is Honest.

BERTHA VON LEHMANN opened her eyes to look upon familiar surroundings. She was in the Burgomaster's house, lying on a couch, and her uncle himself was bending over her. For a moment she smiled at him, forgetting how she came to be there; then she remembered and sat up. He turned quickly to a table behind him.

"Drink this wine, Bertha. It will do you good."

"Why am I here?" she said, putting the proffered drink aside.

"Because, overcome by a little excitement, you fainted," said the Burgomaster. "You owe some thanks to the good fellows who brought you here."

"I want the truth," she returned. "What is the meaning of this outrage upon me?"

"Outrage!" Von Lehmann exclaimed, and then he smiled. "Ah, perhaps it does seem so to you, ignorant as you are of the circumstances. Great events are going forward in the city, Bertha, events beyond my control. If a man will stand against a rushing torrent, he must be swept away; if he sees the danger, and has time, he climbs up a steep bank for safety. I had time, time to reflect that my destruction would serve no one, while by holding on to life I might do something to stem the force of the torrent. So I climbed to safety, and my first thought was for you."

"What are these events?" she asked.

"The sudden and fierce assertion of the people's will," he answered, "against which even the Burgomaster is powerless. All that is purposed I cannot say, I am not in their confidence, but it is revolution."

"You have not told the Duchess?"

"I could not stir a yard from my door without a crowd escorting me, to make sure I was not bent on betraying its intention and thwarting its will. I have no means of communicating with the Duchess. Only by a favor was I allowed to send word to you. You were in danger, Bertha, because of your close attendance upon Her Grace. You were of no account except that you were my niece. I was allowed to send a message to bid you to come to me, because I was ill. It was untrue, but I trusted that your love and gratitude for the past would bring you to me and to safety. I was mistaken. I was allowed to send a second time. Then, when you would not listen, the fellows took the matter into their own hands and brought you by force. Although the people will not listen to my counsel, there remains some respect for me. Their method was rough, perhaps, but you are safe here."

Bertha got up suddenly and faced her uncle.

"If the people are in this temper is it likely they will respect the person of the Duchess?"

"Yes—yes, I think so."

"You don't think so, but you care little so long as you are safe."

"Bertha!"

"Or is it something worse you are than a coward?" she asked.

The Burgomaster's face reddened with anger; yet behind this show of anger there was a malice he could not hide, and a cold calculation which would use any means to gain his end no matter how foul they might be. He believed he had put on the mask of righteous indignation, but his niece saw through it, not down to the very dregs of the man's character, perhaps, but deep enough to hate him.

"I think it is the worse thing that you are," she said slowly.

"I would help Her Grace if I could, but I am powerless," he said.

"Then I can show you the way," she said. "If you have the will, I can be with the Duchess in less than half an hour, and no one the wiser."

"The house is watched."

"No watcher will see me by the way I shall go. Sit down, write word of this plot to the Duchess, and give me the paper. It shall reach her as surely as the sun will rise tomorrow.

"How?"

"Write the letter."

"What use when I know"——

"That you have not the will," she said. "Do you suppose you deceive me? You are a traitor, and of the worst kind, for yours is the treachery which lies concealed beneath a mask of sincerity and friendship. Such men are cowards to the marrow of their bones. You think by dragging me from the Duchess you have done something to isolate her; you have but given the alarm. There are honest men who know something of your scheming, men who will bring your rabble to its knees, who who have dealt with traitors and cowards before this. When I am not seen tonight, the warning word will pass quickly from lip to lip; weapons will be naked and ready, and tomorrow, in spite of your rabble, they will be hammering at these doors, demanding word with the Burgomaster. I did not look to see you die the death of a traitor on your own hearth, or to witness a Von Lehmann dangling from a lamp bracket, but that is your fate as surely as I am here to tell it. I'll be honest, too. If a word of mine could save you from the penalty, I'd pluck out my tongue rather than speak it."

Rage and fear struggled for mastery in the Burgomaster. Had he been convinced his niece had power to ruin him her life would have paid the forfeit, but at the back of his brain there was the thought that, if disaster threatened him, Bertha might prove his salvation. His clenched hands relaxed and he forced himself to humility.

"You shall understand how helpless I am," he said. "Others will prove it."

He walked heavily across the room as a man dejected, hurt by her want of faith in him, and went out. In a moment Bertha was at the door. Her uncle had locked it after him. She stood there for a while looking round the room, awaiting some inspiration which should tell her how she might escape. The window. So obvious a way must be guarded; but anything was better than inaction. Half way towards it she stopped and turned. The door had opened again and Prince Karl entered.

"I come to crave pardon," he said.

"For what?"

"Your manner of asking the question has not the spirit of forgiveness in it," he laughed, "and I think you know the answer. It is a woman's prerogative to flout a lover and make him miserable, but a bold lover makes his opportunity. Whenever I have sought to get word with you alone you have refused me; so—so you are here. Love has used force. When a woman loves it is her way to forgive such violence."

"My uncle has just left me," she answered. "He tells a different tale."

"He is the Burgomaster, so is full of politics. I am a lover, only a lover, and we are alone. For an hour let us forget the world and talk of ourselves. Let us take up the story at the point we left it when last we were alone together."

"I wonder how you will do it," she said.

"Most easily. Bertha"—

"Stop where you are," and she moved as he came towards her so that a table might stand between them.

"You must not make it so difficult," he laughed. "I have a good memory. Last time you were in my arms while I whispered love, and my kiss was on your lips. It would be only natural to continue the story with a kiss."

"For a Judas—yes."

"A Judas! What strange dream is in your head?"

"Was I dreaming when you asked me to marry you?"

"You look so angry, Bertha, you would frighten a less determined lover; but I swear it only makes you more beautiful. Come, tell me all my iniquity and I will answer it. We may be friends afterwards, and the kiss only delayed a little."

"You do not answer my question. I will answer it for you. I was not dreaming except as a fool dreams. I believed that I might be a happy wife. Even when you did not come to me when I expected you, I believed, thinking that my lover was no ordinary man. I came to Metzburg because I heard that Prince Karl was to marry his cousin, the Duchess."

"With mischief in your heart, I warrant."

"With a mission—yes. When you spoke of love to me, you aroused the best and worst in a woman who must henceforth be to you either your heaven or your hell."

"I knew it. Be my heaven, Bertha."

"Your wife! Now!"

"Why, Bertha, even convention cannot claim that a wife always means heaven to a man," laughed Karl, "and most certainly it is not so in the case of Princes. It is true there are rumors that I am to marry my cousin. Indeed, she has set her heart upon it; not for love; that is not part of the bargain, but for state purposes. It is a secret, but I tell you in confidence it is not so certain that I shall marry her, and if not, some

COL. GOETHALS' OWN STORY OF BUILDING THE PANAMA CANAL

Resignation of Jackson Smith, Labor Commissioner, accepted because of "disloyalty" — Friction with Col. Gorgas of the Sanitary Department over grass-cutting—Goethals concentrates all authority in himself

INSTALLMENT SIX

BY MAJOR-GENERAL GEORGE W. GOETHALS,
Governor of the Canal Zone.

THE organization for the construction of the canal, adopted in 1907, did not work satisfactorily. There was an overlapping of work between the departments which resulted not only in friction but in placing subordinate officials under two heads, making it difficult at times to fix responsibility. The departments which formed part of the Department of Construction and Engineering were undertaking work and issuing instructions of which the Chief Engineer had no previous knowledge, and the latter was not in as close touch with the work as his position warranted and required.

While in Washington in January, 1908, I divorced the lock-gate designing force from the authorities on the Isthmus and placed it under Col. H. F. Hodges (he had received his promotion to Lieutenant-Colonel, Corps of Engineers, on Aug. 27, 1907), for I found that the distance from the Isthmus prevented proper supervision of the work and also was causing delays. Furthermore, Col. Hodges was peculiarly fitted for the work through his previous experience and training.

Secretary Taft arrived on the Isthmus on May 6, 1908, and informed me that one purpose of his visit was to relieve Mr. Jackson Smith, who had been made a member of the commission in 1907. There was no question of Mr. Smith's ability. To him probably more than to any other one man was due the system of collecting both skilled and unskilled laborers and of housing and feeding the force. I doubt if anyone could have secured better results in a tropical country which produced nothing and was so far removed from the United States, our only reliable market.

I did not believe that there was any dishonesty in Mr. Smith's management, but I did not feel that I had his confidence and support. To him was attributed a published attack on the new or third commission in the spring of 1907, which predicted failure, and because of this and other indications I was not sure of his loyalty. These views I expressed to Mr. Taft, who catechised separately each member of the commission in regard to Mr. Smith. After making a thorough inquiry in regard to Mr. Smith, the Secretary of War decided to allow him to resign, which he did, his resignation taking effect at the expiration of his annual leave of absence, Sept. 15, 1908.

The question of a successor was then taken up. Mr. Taft decided to appoint Maj. C. A. Devol of the Quartermaster's Department of the army. So far as the vacancy on the commission was concerned, I urged the appointment of Col. H. F. Hodges. He was pre-eminently fitted to take up the designing work and push it. I had more confidence in Col. Hodges' ability to act in my place during absences or in case I should be relieved than in that of either of the two army members of the commission. In the latter contingency, though I regarded Mr. Rousseau as the one, of those available, best fitted temperamentally and professionally to be the chairman and chief engineer, there was no possibility of his advancement to the post if the existing policy of having an army engineer in charge was to continue. A cable message along these lines was sent to the President, and Col. Hodges was selected for a place on the commission; vice Mr. Jackson Smith.

How Culebra Cut looked in August, 1913, showing the lower part of the famous Cucaracha slide on the right.

The office of the Chief Engineer was divided into three divisions. Col. Hodges, after his arrival on the Isthmus, was assigned to duty as Assistant Chief Engineer and put in charge of the first division, under which was placed the design of the locks, including valves, lock-gates and protection devices, operating machinery, movable dams and spillways. Later he had charge of the inspection and erection of the lock-gates and the installation of the operating machinery.

Mr. Rousseau, the remaining engineer member of the commission, as assistant to the Chief Engineer, was placed at the head of the second division and had charge of all mechanical matters, preparation of estimates, some of the civil engineering matters that arose, and later the dry dock and coaling stations, both design and construction. Col. Hodges and Mr. Rousseau were my advisers, and I have always referred to them as my right and left bowers. To the faithful and loyal support of these two men is attributed in large measure the satisfactory progress of the work.

The third division was put under Mr. Caleb M. Saville, in charge of meteorology, hydrography, surveys and special investigations, the most important of which was the examination of the material underlying Gatun Dam. This, in brief, was the organization of the construction forces that resulted from the changes made in 1908, and which was continued, with minor changes to suit new conditions as they arose, until the water was admitted into Culebra Cut on Oct. 10, 1913.

When, in 1910, it was decided to fortify the canal, involving the construction of gun and mortar batteries for its defense against naval attack, I took the position that the Isthmus was too small for two separate and independent construction organizations and that all work of this character on the Isthmus should be under one head. This policy was adopted so that the canal forces and plant were utilized for the purpose. In the same way the construction of quarters for the army is now in charge of the canal authorities with resulting economy in both instances. The additional work was taken care of by the creation of units reporting to the Chief Engineer.

I had paid little attention to sanitary work other than to attempt to have grass cut by scythes and mowing machines instead of machetes, for the estimates that had been submitted for constructing the canal were exclusive of sanitation and civil administration. After examining the work being done, the methods of its doing, and discussing the matter with Maj. Devol, I felt that a reduction in the expenditures could be made and better co-ordination secured if the grass cutting and garbage and night soil collection were turned over to the Quartermaster's Department and the drainage work turned over to the construction divisions.

I discussed the matter with Col. Gorgas, and, though I failed to convince him that the work could be done as well, if not better, I finally secured his consent to have the scheme tried. I watched the statistics carefully for some months, but, finding that the percentage of sick continued to drop, I felt that the new method of doing the work was producing the results expected, and the cost was less, notwithstanding that greater areas of grass and brush were cut. In 1910 Col. Gorgas stated that the work was not being done so well as formerly and requested a return to the old system, but, as economies had been effected and the statistics continued to show a constantly decreasing percentage in the sick rate, I declined to comply.

The organization of the Sanitary Department was top-heavy, and this was overcome by abolishing some of the existing positions. The general policy of concentration was made applicable to the hospitals. In 1907 the health branch of the department consisted of seven hospitals, located one each at various settlements along the line of the canal, in addition to the main hospitals at Ancon and Colon, while in 1909 the line hospitals had been eliminated, with the exception of the penitentiary located at Culebra; the sick were carried to the terminal hospitals on hospital cars attached to passenger trains.

The canal zone was divided into five municipalities, each with its Mayor, Municipal Court, secretary and treasurer and Judge. These were replaced by four administrative districts, to each of which a Tax Collector was assigned. The Municipal Judges were replaced by District Judges, and the public works and improvements of the several districts were placed under a Superintendent of Public Works for the zone.

Ex-Senator Blackburn, who had served as the head of the Department of Civil Administration from April 1, 1907, severed his connection with the work by resignation, effective Dec. 4, 1909, and by this I lost one of my supporters. His long public service, his knowledge of men and public affairs, made him a very valuable adviser and counsellor, and his method of handling matters with the Panama officials in cases affecting the interests of the Canal Zone and the neighboring republic has never been equaled. The vacancy on the commission was filled by the appointment on May 6, 1910, of Mr. Maurice H. Thatcher of Kentucky, who occupied the position until Aug. 9, 1913. Mr. Thatcher was succeeded by Mr. Richard L. Metcalfe of Nebraska, who continued in office until April 1, 1914, when the commission was abolished and the organization provided by the Panama Canal act was made effective.

During the construction period each department administered its own affairs, but with the reorganization under the Panama Canal Act began a gradual concentration of administrative functions, including the canal proper, the Canal Zone Government and the Panama Railroad; so that all accounting is done now by one force instead of three; the records of all departments and divisions are consolidated under one head, as are all correspondence, property and drafting.

The reorganization is completed and follows that which existed during construction as closely as the new conditions permitted. The same results are sought—economy of administration and the concentration of authority in such a way as not only to enable the fixing of responsibility, but also to allow such scope as to arouse an individual interest in the work. The reorganization was begun on April 1, 1914, and was completed the September following; it has, therefore, been in operation but a relatively short time, yet the team work already secured promises for it the same success as that attained by the construction organization.

By the Panama Canal act specific provision is made for the courts and their officials, making an independent judicial system for the canal and the zone. The remaining construction work is executed either through the engineer of maintenance or by separate divisions reporting to the Governor, the latter to exist only so long as may be necessary to complete the work, which includes dry docks, coaling stations and terminal facilities, not authorized until 1912 and therefore not yet completed.

Dear Mr Lincoln
A certain naval officer would very much like to see V.

Letter written to Mr. Lincoln by Capt. Kenny when the German spy's plans were developing.

and Hungarians. A regular spy-hunting epidemic set in. Every "alien enemy," under which ultimately all Germans and Austro-Hungarians (naturalized or not) were included, was considered ipso facto a spy. Barbers, waiters, who had attended to their work from morning 'till evening, and who do not know the difference between a torpedo and a 14-inch gun, and who, even if they knew the difference, had absolutely no time or opportunity or desire to do spy's work, were relentlessly persecuted as such.

Anybody having a German name, whether his family had been naturalized two, three or even four generations, was boycotted, persecuted. The columns of the Times were filled daily with notices of changes of names. Then the newspapers started a propaganda to prevent the changing of names, and indeed the Home Office issued an ordinance restricting changes to certain well-defined cases. Naturalized members of the Stock Exchange, of German and Austro-Hungarian origin, were excluded from entering or doing business upon its reopening, under a far-fetched pretext. I myself was several times insulted in my club (the National Liberal), although every one there knew that I had been an M. P.

In short it became more and more evident that life in England for me or any other foreigner, whether naturalized or not, was becoming impossible.

Slowly but steadily, under the cumulative effect of all these barbarities, I made up my mind to shake England's dust off my feet. But I did not want to leave without "getting even." The plan I mapped out to achieve this will seem to many startling.

It was nothing less than a decision to find out important naval and military secrets and to betray them to the central Powers, and, having achieved that, to quit England forever, if still live.

This is no mere figure of speech. I knew that what I was going to do was technically high treason, but my blood was boiling in me at all the calculated barbarities inflicted by a haughty, perfidious race upon innocent people.

My aim as stated was simplicity itself. But to carry it out meant clever acting. Indeed, to effectively carry out my scheme it was essential that my plan of campaign should only be known to me.

It was patent to me as a first essential condition of success that I must obtain the co-operation of the German secret service without letting them know what I had in mind. And I take this opportunity to apologize to Legationsrath Gneist, the German Consul at Rotterdam, for the deception I had to practice even on him, and this will no doubt make clear to him certain things hitherto inexplicable. I am quite certain that had I let him fully into my confidence the whole affair would have miscarried.

I also wish to apologize to Capt. P. W. Kenny of the M. O. 5 (i. e. counter espionage) at the War Office, London, for having made him my unwitting tool. Capt. Kenny is the only honest, intelligent, brainy officer in the British secret service of all those I ever met, but then he is an Irishman.

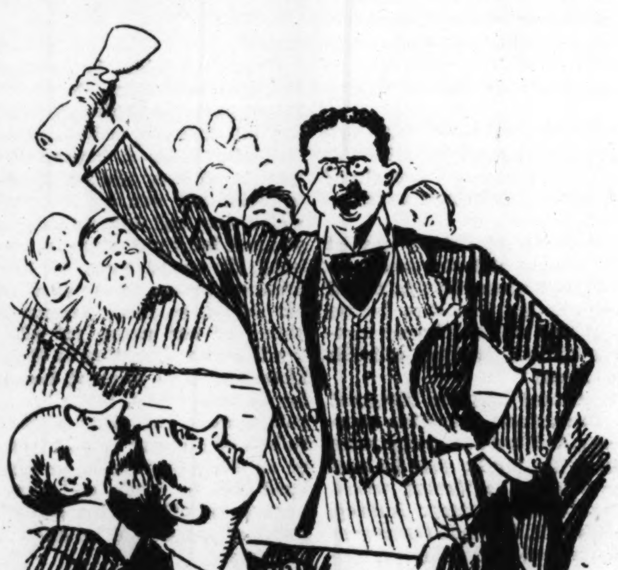
The deception as to the British authorities I consistently kept up until I saw the paragraph regarding Kuepferle in the newspapers of April 29. Indeed, that very day I sent a cable to Mr. Churchill. When, however, I noted the British Government's boast regarding Kuepferle's arrest, I made up my mind to reveal all. Here is the plain story:

On Aug. 18, last year, while sitting in the smoke-room of the National Liberal Club, London, I received a telephone message to ring up a certain number in the War Office. Having done so, I was requested to come across and ask access to a certain room. Once there, I was taken to Lieut. Bellamy, who asked me whether I would be willing to undertake to censor all Hungarian and Rumanian correspondence, telegrams, cables, etc. I readily consented. At this time none of the individual persecutions mentioned above had been embarked upon and I saw no inconsistency in my helping the War Office as Hungarian censor.

Accordingly, I began my duties on Aug. 20. Sometimes I worked at the War Office, but most of my hours of service were in the Mount Pleasant Postoffice. I continued to act as censor four or five weeks, during which time the systematic persecution and insulting of "aliens," even though they were naturalized, assumed definite and systematic forms. I, myself, had to submit to many personal insults. My mind was all but made up to shake the dust of England off my feet when an incident, trifling in itself, prompted me to hesitate no longer.

One morning as I walked into the Postal Censor's office and took my dossier containing "black lists," etc., several huge bundles of printed matter were handed to me for examination. I found them to contain an appeal by the Hungarian Ladies' Red Cross Society to the Hungarian residents in the United States for monetary assistance for Red Cross work. The appeal was signed by nearly all the leading women of Hungary, many of whom were and are personally known to me. I reported the contents in conformity with the facts, yet they were ordered to be destroyed.

Consider this for a moment. It was an appeal by the Hungarian Red Cross for urgent financial need for the humanitarian purposes of Red Cross work. Why, even enemies on the field of battle are supposed to render assistance to the wounded. Yet the appeal for funds to do this were ordered to be destroyed in the hidden and mysterious labyrinths of the Postal Censor.



Paks Vobiscum; or, The Lincoln Handicap—"We weel not zend Budg-ett to ze Haus of Lorrdz to be zrown out on-ly again!!" (Mr. I. T. T. Lincoln—born at Paks in Hungary.)
From Punch, March 9, 1910.

I resigned as censor. Be it remembered that I did not accept any payment for my services. I now determined to leave England, but before so doing I felt compelled by an irresistible force born of disgust and thirst for revenge to hit back in some form or another. After carefully considering various schemes I finally decided to find out important military or naval secrets and to present them to Germany.

I had highly placed friends everywhere and occasionally obtained information of great importance.

I knew, for instance, of the first raid on the Bight of Heligoland, two days in advance—and so did the Germans. But I was not satisfied with occasional tidbits. I wanted to make a big scoop in the most thorough fashion. As will be seen from what follows, I had to try many avenues before I finally succeeded.

I offered my services in turn to the Home Secretary, to Sir Edward Grey and to Mr. Churchill, whom I knew personally. But they were not accepted. Next I attempted to get into the Counter Espionage Department (M. O. 5) at the War Office. Just what happened I will set out in some detail:

On Dec. 10 I called on Lieutenant-Colonel Bellamy at the War Office and asked him to introduce me to the secret service officers. He presented me to Maj. Anderson, in room 225 of the W. O., who next day presented me to Capt. P. W. Kenny, who, is, so to speak, the acting chief of the secret service at the War Office, or rather of the military counter espionage service. Capt. Kenny is an officer of rare intelligence and ability and is one of the best linguists I had met in England. As an ex-M. P. I was cordially received.

Now my aim really was nothing less than to lure part of the English fleet into a certain quarter of the North Sea on a certain day and to have the German fleet within easy steaming distance. In order to procure this, I proposed just the reverse to Capt. Kenny and laid before him a carefully prepared scheme, the ostensible purpose of which was to destroy part of the German navy.

Capt. Kenny complimented me on my "ingenious plan, which is wonderfully original," he said, and promised to discuss it with two of his chiefs. He took careful notes of all I told him.

In order to succeed the more easily I explained my alleged scheme to a friend of mine, an M. P., who was so struck with its feasibility that he promised to mention it to Mr. McPherson, M. P., who is parliamentary secretary to the War Secretary. He also spoke to Mr. McKenna, the Home Secretary, in the Commons. Needless to say, he did not know my real intentions. If this should reach his eyes he will be not a little surprised. Of course Mr. McPherson and Mr. McKenna in reading this will immediately know to which M. P. I am referring.

My object in doing this was to forestall Capt. Kenny's probable inquiries.

On Dec. 7 I met Capt. Kenny at the War Office by appointment. He told me my plan was under consideration and he then went once more into a discussion of my scheme.

On Dec. 16 I again met Capt. Kenny. He told me that my plan, though most wonderful, could not be accepted, as it would necessitate disclosing to me the whereabouts of the British fleet, or part of it, which could not be disclosed to anyone, no matter what advantages might result from it.

I was balked. However, by my plan and other factors I had evidently gained the confidence of Capt. Kenny, who told me of a possibility of sending me in a few week's time to a neutral country for certain purposes.

It was evident that I must adopt a new line of procedure. I found out from Capt. Kenny that the headquarters of the German espionage for England were at the German consulate in Rotterdam and that he, too, had many agents in that country. "Incidentally," he remarked, "we might ask you to go to Rotterdam to find out how much cocoa and other foodstuffs are exported from Holland into Germany," adding that they had found it hitherto very difficult to find this out. This at once showed me an opening.

I said to myself. If such a comparatively easy matter causes the counter espionage difficulties, provided I could find out this or any other important things, surely that would enable me to get behind the scenes and thus accomplish my purpose.

Next day, Dec. 17, I left London for Rotterdam, where I arrived on the evening of Dec. 18. My trip to Rotterdam was not known to anyone.

Once there I had to devise means to gain the confidence of the German Consul. For it was evident that I might prejudice my case if I should straightway offer my services to him. No matter how sincerely I wished to help him, he might consider me as an emissary of England, in which case the achievement of my purpose would be altogether impossible.

Now, my object was to obtain important secrets from the Germans which I would use as a means to get into the confidence of the English and find out and use things to their harm.

Consequently I am constrained to admit that I worked the German Consul at Rotterdam as my tool, by not only not disclosing to him my true plan, but by side-tracking him, in which attempt I entirely succeeded. I hope Consul Gneist will appreciate my explanation and not condemn me.

But a word of advice to him. He must be more careful in the future. For, indeed, had I been an English agent the consequences might have been disastrous, so important were the official secrets he confided to me.

He knows now, of course, that while I could not carry out my scheme, I prevented the information he gave me from being of any real service to the English by warning him the very moment I saw my plan had miscarried.

On Dec. 30 I had so far succeeded that next day the German Consul promised me the delivery of certain documents.

During my conversation with Capt. Kenny in London he told me once in secret that although he knew there were many German spies in England, he could not "unearth" (this was the word he used) their organization nor discover the general methods by which they sent their information to Germany.

The information I got from the Consul on the 30th placed in my hands the absolute and unquestionable power and means to hunt down most, if not all, of the German spies in England—had I wished to do so.

In passing, I should like to remark that the Germans are better informed of the secret service of England than the English are of the Germans. I will only give two instances.

On Dec. 29 I had a conversation at the German legation at The Hague with Lieutenant-Colonel von Ostertag, military attache of Germany, who, as Maj. Ostertag, was for seven years prior to the war German military attache in London.

Lieutenant-Colonel von Ostertag, during our conversation, complained about a slighting remark Capt. Kenny made about him to someone following the outbreak of the war. This was very significant, for, knowing Capt. Kenny to be a gentleman, I knew that he would not make a remark of that nature about anyone except to one in his confidence. It was obvious, therefore, that in Capt. Kenny's entourage there was someone who was in Germany's service. The other instance was furnished by Herr Legationsrath Gneist, the German Consul in Rotterdam. He not only knew a great deal of the secret service work of England, and of the disposition of part of the British fleet, but he also knew one of the principal codes used by Capt. Kenny's agents.

I had to see the German Consul at 10 a. m. on Dec. 31 by appointment. When I called at the consulate he was not there, but had left a message for me explaining that he had left for Wesel, Germany, that morning specially in my behalf, but would be back at 6 p. m. When I said that he could not do the return journey in that short time, I was informed that a German motor car from Wesel was to meet him at Arnheim, take him to Wesel and bring him back there. Wesel, it should be pointed out, is the headquarters of the Nachrichtendienst (information service) connected with Great Britain.

Accordingly I called at 6 p. m. This was my final interview with the German Consul, and he promised to have all my instructions and codes copied out for me and sent to my hotel next morning. It was considered advisable not to call again at the consulate, as I might have been shadowed by English spies. Even had they done this I amply provided for this contingency in two separate ways, as I shall show.

(How Mr. Lincoln got back to England with information and papers of extraordinary value furnished him by the German Consul at Rotterdam, how he used part of these in an attempt to hoodwink the British War Office; together with further revelations of the workings of the German spy system, and of how his plan was received will be told in the second installment, which will appear in next Sunday's Post-Dispatch Magazine.)

THE BIGGEST WATER WHEEL PLANT

By far the greatest hydro-electric development in America is that now well under way to completion on the Big Creek, that flows into the San Joaquin River, about 70 miles east of Fresno, Cal. This short stream falls 4000 feet in six miles and drains a basin of about 88 square miles, over which there is an annual average rainfall of 80 inches.

A light and power corporation is turning this tremendous waterfall into electricity and transmitting it to Los Angeles, 240 miles away. The river has been dammed to make a reservoir with a capacity of 53,000 acre feet, which is now being increased to 120,000 acre feet by raising the dams.

There are two power houses, one half way down and the other at the foot of the fall. The water runs through a tunnel and steel pipes to the first power house, where it rushes from 6-inch nozzles with a velocity of 350 feet per second, or about 240 miles an hour. It strikes the buckets of wheels 94 inches in diameter, making these spin as fast as the drivers of a locomotive traveling 100 miles an hour. Each pair of these wheels develops 23,500 horsepower. Then the water falls through more tunnels and pipes to the lower power house, where it sets more wheels spinning.

In each power house there are two main generators, each of 17,500 kilowatts capacity. Here the current is generated at 6000 volts and raised by transformers to 150,000 volts. It is carried by six aluminum cables, each an inch in diameter, across the 240 miles of desert and mountains to Los Angeles.

When the plant's full power is realized "it will form an inexhaustible mine of energy, with an output that could not be equaled by the consumption of over 8,000,000 tons of coal per year in a very efficient plant."

The Frohman the World Did Not Know

C. F. had predicted. However, it might have been changed even then and Mr. Thomas tried to induce C. F. to make certain changes, but without success. After six performances the two weeks' notice was posted and the play withdrawn.

Many of the plays which Charles Frohman produced were known to be certain failures even before they were placed in rehearsal. But if he gave his word that he would produce an author's play the play was produced in spite of everything. As a general rule he paid $1500 to an author when he accepted a play. A year ago he accepted a play from Paul Armstrong called "The Heart of a Thief," for which he paid the usual $1500 in advance. When the play was put in rehearsal it was evident to everyone except the author that it was hopeless, but it was given an out-of-town opening and brought into the Hudson Theater, where it ran exactly one week. When he decided to close it he called the company together.

"You've all done the very best you knew how," he said. "You've worked hard and I appreciate it. I don't want you to blame the author of the play or the critics for finding fault with it. It's all my fault. I thought it was a good play. I was mistaken."

And all through his long career this was the way Charles Frohman accepted failure. He never blamed the actors, he never blamed the playwrights or the critics for a failure. He always shouldered all the blame by saying that he thought the play was a good play and that he had been mistaken.

One of the things that C. F. prided himself on was his reputation for producing "clean" plays. Nothing made him more unhappy than to be accused of pandering to low tastes. Only last fall his production of "The Song of Songs" in Philadelphia was criticized on that score. He had spent a lot of time on the production and given it a strong cast. He confided to several people that he expected it to be one of his biggest winners. But when its morality was questioned C. F. decided he would not have his name associated with it. He quickly transferred the production to Al H. Woods, who is not noted for being over-squeamish in such matters. Woods brought the play to New York shortly afterwards and it has had a long run.

C. F. was equally jealous of the reputations of his women stars. He actually forbade his unmarried stars to frequent Broadway restaurants, especially after the theater. He always pointed with pride to the example of Miss Maude Adams, who, by keeping herself a semi-recluse, made her stage personality much more interesting. And he backed up his argument by showing how Ethel Barrymore's drawing power had waned in New York because she was so much in evidence in the city's night life, in vaudeville and in motion pictures. Being a semi-recluse himself he wanted his stars to be likewise and he broke with several of them because he considered that they did not deport themselves in a dignified manner off the stage.

While Charles Frohman was not a multimillionaire like A. L. Erlinger, he was still a rich man. His interests were wide spread. Although only two theaters in New York—the Empire and Lyceum—were directly under his management, when he died he was financially interested in at least ten others.

The Real Truth About Cleopatra

afford to invite the public criticism that a divorce would bring forth.

Cleopatra was therefore installed in one of Caesar's villas and although he spent much time with her and their infant son, who had been named Caesarion, he still lived with his Roman wife.

It was during this period that Caesar began to dream of a throne, and it is evident that he first planned the world kingdom which was the dream of Cleopatra through the remainder of her life. Together they planned for the union of the Egyptian kingdom and the Roman Empire, with Caesar and Cleopatra on the throne, and their young son as the heir.

Cleopatra was naturally ambitious, and during this period she seems to have ever dreamed of the establishment of a great dynasty with her son eventually ruler of the civilized world.

Step by step Caesar had been drawing nearer to the realization of their ambition. He had been made Dictator, for ten years, then for life and then the office had been made hereditary.

But his tendency towards royalty was becoming more and more apparent to both his friends and his enemies and the supporters of the republic became more and more bitter towards him. On the day that Caesar was murdered in the halls of the Roman Senate, he had expected to be declared King of all the Roman Empire outside Italy, and it was this expectation that caused him to go to the Senate after he had been repeatedly warned of the conspiracy to assassinate him.

It was after Cleopatra had partially recovered from the shock of Caesar's death and the claims of Octavian, Caesar's nephew to the office which Caesar had held, had been accepted by the Senate, that she turned to Mark Antony as the man who could advance the claims of the young Caesarion. Antony, who had been Caesar's most trusted friend, had already become famous as a soldier and orator and was recognized as the natural leader of the party. Before the return of Cleopatra to Egypt he promised to work for the interests of her son, but after her departure he seems to have spent his time in advancing his own political interests.

Some historians have claimed that it was Cleopatra's desire for a companion to take the place of Caesar, that caused her to appeal to Antony, but Weigall thinks that her ambition for her son was the reason she sought the aid of the new leader in Rome.

It was not until years later that she learned to love Antony, and her love for him, it would seem, was genuine, for in the later years of her life there were many times when she could have better advanced her own interests by renouncing him, and giving him up to his enemies.

With Antony no such worthy love seems to have been possible. He was described as a "colossal child, capable of conquering a world and incapable of resisting a pleasure."

From the start he apparently played false with Cleopatra, and she seems to have known it, but when she again had an opportunity to lay her case before him, she did it in a much different manner than when she had made an alliance with him in Rome.

It was after Antony had won his great victory over Brutus and the other murderers of Caesar, and had become the most powerful man in the world, that he sent for Cleopatra to come to Tarsus, where he was encamped with his army. Antony, according to Weigall, had not summoned Cleopatra because of any affections for her, but because his request for her aid in the recent war had been refused, owing to her belief that he had been false with her and his desire to reproach her. Now she recognized in Antony the only hope of accomplishing her ambition for her son, and she decided to impress upon Antony the wealth of Egypt, knowing that this more than anything else would win him to her cause.

Her appearance at Tarsus and the richness and splendor of her fleet, with the banquets which dazzled the world, have often been described by historians. Antony seems to have been completely won over, and here it is said he first began to play the lover to Cleopatra. It was later in Alexandria that he actually married her, after having won the lasting enmity of Octavian, Dictator at Rome, by divorcing his wife, who was Octavian's sister.

After this new alliance was formed with Antony, Weigall admits that Cleopatra had caused her sister and several others who had conspired against her to be murdered, but these deaths Weigall says, were to have been expected and were not looked upon as crimes.

When Antony and Cleopatra had returned to Alexandria, it is admitted by Weigall that their manner of life was riotous, and that Antony was seldom sober, but Cleopatra during all this time was working out her plan for the addition of the Roman Empire to her kingdom.

In the years that followed and the war between Antony and Octavian, which resulted in the crushing defeat of Antony and the deserting of his troops, Cleopatra is pictured as a high-minded, serious woman, striving against impossible odds to raise her son to the high position which she and his father, Caesar, had planned for him. Antony, on the other hand, it would seem by his continual drunkenness and show of weakness after his defeat, at times became almost the object of her scorn, yet she was ever loyal to him, according to Weigall. Other historians have pictured her as attempting to betray him, to Octavian, but Weigall declares that even when all seemed to be lost and she herself faced captivity or suicide, she refused to have her husband put to death and thus gain the forgiveness of Octavian and the promise that her son should be allowed to reign in Egypt.

When Antony finally saw his fleet and his troops desert after he had lined them up before the walls of Alexandria to give battle to Octavian, he rushed into the palace declaring that Cleopatra had betrayed him, and forced her to flee to the tomb she had prepared for herself to escape his anger. But even this did not cause her to turn against him, and a few hours later when she learned that Antony had pierced his body with his sword, she had him brought to her and Weigall says that the fallen hero of Rome died in her arms.

Cleopatra had sent her son to India for safety and now, with her foes in the city, there seemed to be nothing left but captivity, so she decided to end her life. Octavian, however, was very anxious that she should live, that he might take her to Rome as a captive and parade her through the streets in golden chains in his triumph. For several days she refrained from ending her life, because of threats Octavian had made against her three children, also the children of Antony. Finally after a visit to the tomb of her dead husband she went to an upper room in the tomb she had built for herself and after writing to Octavian asking that she be buried beside Antony, she with her two women servants ended their lives. It is supposed that she held an asp to her arm and let it bite her, but this has never been fully established.

In connection with Cleopatra's preparations for death one of the most heartless crimes of her whole career has been charged to her by historians, but Weigall places this in a much different light.

Cleopatra had long before the end decided that should Alexandria fall she would kill herself. With this in view she experimented with many poisons, seeking to learn which would produce the easiest death. In order to learn this it has been said that she gave poisons to unsuspecting and innocent servants and then watched their death agonies. Weigall admits these experiments with poisons, but says they were upon condemned criminals and not upon innocent servants.

HOW TO BE SLIM

By Winifred Grace Forrest.

If you are too fat and want to reduce your weight 15 or 20 pounds, don't starve and weaken your system, or think you must always be laughed at on account of your fat, but go to any good druggist and get a box of Oil of Korein capsules, take one after each meal and one before retiring at night.

Weigh yourself once a week and note what a pleasant and reliable method this is for removing superfluous fat from any part of the body.

It costs little, is absolutely harmless, and I am sure a week's trial should convince anyone that it is unnecessary to be burdened with even a single pound of unsightly fat.—ADV.

other Princess must be my wife. It is one of the necessities to which birth compels us. But our heaven is outside such necessity. You must see that it is so."

"Was all this calculation in your mind when you kissed me?"

"Heavens, no! I was a lover and thought of nothing else."

"You said wife distinctly."

"Meaning it in its best sense and forgetting that I was a Prince as well as a lover."

"And afterwards did you laugh to think what a fool I was?" she asked.

"I was aglow with my good fortune."

Her eyes did not leave his. There was no sign of the disappointed woman in her, contempt rather than anger was in her face, and there was not a tremor in her voice.

"And my uncle?" she asked. "Was he aware of this—this arrangement of yours?"

"Your uncle is—is just the Burgomaster," Karl answered. "After his kind, no doubt he has speculated on the advantage of having a niece who is loved by a Prince. I wager he would urge you to seize a golden opportunity, thinking only of his money bags. Truth to tell, Bertha, I am not very fond of your uncle, and in the future I would not have you see too much of him."

"That is strange since you visit him so constantly."

"State matters; and for your sake I would treat him as courteously as I can."

"I shall not see much more of him," she answered. "So far you are likely to have your desire. If truth can come from his lips there is revolt in hand in Metzburg. He is far too poor a thing to sway men, that is a strong man's work—yours. Why not tell me all that is in your mind? My uncle locked the door when he went out of this room just now, so it is evident that I am a helpless prisoner—his or yours. Why not speak plainly?"

"It is the people's doing, not mine," he answered, "but it is true that they look to me to help them. My cousin has acted foolishly for long past, and with the coming of the Elector affairs have reached the breaking point. I know that the people are right and I am forced to their side against the Duchess. Who can say where the revolution may lead? I do not think it will lead to marriage with the Duchess; it may mean—Bertha, throw in your lot with mine. The world is changing. My cousin's court, with its ceremonies, its jester, her imperious will, are things of yesterday. Tomorrow—Bertha, I may have such power tomorrow that I shall be able to tell the people that I have chosen my wife, and so claim you before them all."

For a moment she was silent, then she laughed.

"To marry you would be a worse crime than to be merely your victim. You confess your iniquity, without troubling me to tell you of it. Why, Karl, I would sooner trust a liar's word than your oath," and she laughed at him in derision, stirring the brute in him.

"There is a limit even to love," he said.

"I found it long ago," she answered. "I said I came to Metzburg with a mission. Partly it is accomplished, part of it is yet to do, if not by me, by others. You think I came to whisper against you to the Duchess. There was no need. She knows you for what you are and despises you even as I do. Marry you! Why, it would be difficult to find a man so mean that she would not rather call him husband than marry you. And there are men, men who are not mean, who know you for what you are, who watch you and are armed against you, who will ruin this scheme as surely as I helped ruin that other scheme of yours when you would have captured Her Grace in the forest."

"You are a strange woman, Bertha," Karl said quietly. "You seem to hate me, yet until now you must have set some value upon my love. Did you always wear the chain I gave you until by accident you dropped it in the hall yonder?"

"Always. Love is dead, deceit has killed it as effectually as a dagger thrust which reaches the heart, yet for the sake of the past I would have saved you. I ruined your scheme, but the Duchess had no hint from me who it was who had plotted against her. You see how great a fool a woman can be."

"I understand how dangerous she can be, but this time I have you safe. A little reflection may convince you that you do not hate me as much as you imagine. For the moment I am content to know that it is not in your power to do me harm."

"You have men to deal with now," she answered, "and there will be small leniency for traitors."

"Brave words," he laughed. "It is the lady-in-waiting who speaks, the lady-in-waiting who has forgotten she is only the Burgomaster's niece, and the daughter of a merchant who was a traitor, a woman who could not face the scandal talked about her in Berlin. It is an unsavory record, my dear Bertha. You cannot afford to be too particular. You will have time to reflect before we talk of these matters again."

Karl went to the door and called for the Burgomaster, who came so promptly that it was evident he had been waiting for the summons.

"We must keep your niece securely for the night, Burgomaster."

"There are good cellars in the house, Your Highness."

"That would be too great brutality for so fair a lady," laughed the Prince. "You must take lessons in gentleness, Burgomaster, or you will get a reputation for barbarity. If the lock on the door is strong enough, and the window not within jumping distance of the street, the lady's own chamber will be prison enough."

"As you will, Your Highness, but I'll have a man guard the door and one outside to watch the window."

"Well, I cannot blame your precaution. I like not playing the jailer myself; you will see to that, Burgomaster. Come to me afterwards, there are one or two orders for tomorrow I must give you. Good night, Bertha, and good rest."

"You fool," hissed Von Lehmann at his niece when the Prince had gone, "why don't you conform to his wishes? It would be the making of us both. By tomorrow night he will be Duke of Podina."

"Let it be a cellar if you like," she answered. "They will certainly find me even there, when they come to clear this house of traitors. You would be wise to get clear of Metzburg tonight."

All the answer she got was a coarse oath. He dared not risk disobeying the Prince, or the Burgomaster would certainly have locked her in a celler to break her spirit. She was taken to her own room, her uncle himself seeing that the door was secure, and he placed as sentry before it Long Joachim, who, since the failure of the Festenhausen scheme, had smuggled himself into the city, and had found good quarters, good pay and little work in the Burgomaster's employment.

"She's there until she's wanted," Joachim said, "and I'll look for someone to bring me a flagon of wine presently, eh, Burgomaster? Night watching is thirsty work."

"You shall have it," Von Lehmann answered. He could not refuse, but presently there should be a sharp dealing with these fellows who now preyed so heavily upon his powerlessness. He cursed his niece again as he went to the room where the Prince was waiting for him.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Waiting for Tomorrow.

THE Elector was to visit the Rathaus today that the good burghers of Metzburg might give him official welcome to the city. There would be ceremonious and set speeches. The Burgomaster would voice the welcome in high-sounding phrases, and His Highness would tender his thanks, speaking of his pleasure at visiting their beautiful and famous city, and declare his lasting friendship for their Duchess and this land of Podina.

The Burgomaster had said that it would be difficult to make the citizens rejoice at the Elector's coming, but he was wrong apparently, for flags fluttered gaily in the light breeze, and carpet and tapestries hung from many a window. The Rathaus hid its somber time-worn walls behind a riot of color, and the house of the Burgomaster showed tapestry and decoration at every window that looked upon the market place.

Metzburg woke early this morning. Men and women began to loiter in the streets not long after daybreak. There would be little business done in shops or market place until the Elector had come and gone. If they had no great love for His Highness of Brandenburg, they were all desirous to see him. Some secured a point of vantage early, settling themselves to wait patiently; others moved about, leaving it to chance upon which part of the route they might ultimately find themselves; others again were eager to reach some definite spot that they might be with certain of their comrades, and maneuvered until they had accomplished this end.

By the castle the streets were thinly peopled, it was the market place and the adjacent streets which drew the crowd. There the air pulsated with excitement, and Bertha von Lehmann, standing by her window, was conscious of the fact. Her room looked upon a narrow street which gave on the market place. Hurrying feet had passed and repassed under her window since dawn, but looking down she had noted one man who remained in the angle of an opposite wall.

Only with the dawn had Bertha become aware of the watcher's presence there; she knew nothing of those other two who had come and gone so stealthily. She had told her uncle and Prince Karl of brave men who would defend the Duchess and ruin their schemes; she knew there were such men, but they were few, and what could they accomplish against a determined rabble if the men of the Guard refused to interfere? What could they do?

There was no escape. Bertha had realized this when the door had been locked and a villainous man, past all cajolery, set to watch it. If he slept, she had no tool with which to make even an attempt upon the lock. She was in darkness, no light had been left in her room, and she had no knowledge of the hour when the door had been locked upon her. Daybreak came long before she expected it. She had thrown herself, dressed as she was, upon the bed, not to sleep, but to rest a little and be prepared for whatever might happen; and then she had opened her eyes suddenly to find the light creeping into her room. Perhaps she had slept for some time.

And from daylight there had been hurrying feet under her window. All Metzburg was abroad to—to do what? There was some shouting from the direction of the market place. Had the Elector come already?

All night long there had been a search for Bertha von Lehmann. One man, by strategy, had penetrated to the apartment of Prince Karl. The Prince was not there, nor was there any sign of a prisoner, nor news that a woman had passed along these corridors during the last few hours. Another, feigning drunkenness to protect him from too close questioning, had gone from tavern to tavern seeking news, hoping that some well-paid villain might be making merry with his gains and grow boastful in his cups. Hans searched the house where Bergolet had been kept a prisoner, and bluffly questioned a woman there, who laughed when he had gone, thinking he was a lover hoodwinked by some clever rival. One had stood all night in the shadows near the Duchess' apartments, not a set sentry, but a watcher of the sentries, a watcher for any man or woman who might seek to approach the Duchess. Two had wandered the city together, this way and that, Capt. Saxe and Gustav. Twice they had passed along the street which ran behind the Burgomaster's house, and once Saxe had tried the door. They had lingered in the market place noting that lights burned in the Burgomaster's house all night, but of course this might mean nothing. He was likely to be full of business preparing for the morrow.

Earlier in the evening they had knocked at the saddler's door and the old man's keen eyes had quickly recognized Saxe.

"I saved you from a sword thrust once, saddler."

"Aye, I remember it. Is Bergolet missing again, and are you come expecting to find him here?"

"No, it is the woman who is missing this time, Bertha von Lehmann."

"Lies, I warrant, same as it was with the jester. You found no jester here, you'll find no woman."

"The jester was here, Master Saddler," Saxe answered. "He told me so, and that the Burgomaster's niece had a secret way of escape."

"He was laughing at you," chuckled the old man. "That's what a jester's for, to make a fool of you."

"I tell you Bertha von Lehmann is in danger, saddler. She has been kind to you; won't you help her?"

"Aye, that I will," was the answer. "Bring her here, and I'll hide her as best I can. There are a lot of ruffians about the streets tonight. I've noticed it. It's this feast of St. Winifried brings them. It's always the same at the feast time."

"Shall we look in the room up the narrow stairs yonder?" said Saxe.

"That's no good as a hiding place. Didn't you break in the door last time? And there's been nobody round saying he's got orders from the castle to mend it. Money is too scarce for me to pay for the mending. I'll ask Her Grace next time I fashion a piece of harness for her and she comes to look at it. In the Duchess' name was it that you came? I'll be sworn she never gave orders to have my house searched."

"We have no orders tonight. We are all friends of Bertha von Lehmann. Saddler, there is a secret way of escape from that room upstairs."

"Ah, that's good. Bergolet's joke, is it? Oh, it's a good one. Come and show me. I'm an old fool who doesn't know his own house, though I was born in it, and my father before me. Aye, it will be main useful to me, this secret way out, when someone I don't want to see comes knocking at the door."

He lit a lantern and led the way. Saxe closely examined the room. Bergolet had passed from it into the Burgomaster's house; he might do the same and learn whether Bertha was a prisoner there. The saddler watched his search, holding up the lantern to give him light, but Saxe tried the walls in vain.

"Cannot you help me, old man?" he pleaded presently.

"I am, holding the lantern. I can see no hidden door with it."

"It is well hidden, that is all," Saxe answered. "Our being unable to find it may cost a woman her life."

"Finding it may be the death of us," was the answer. "Where would it lead to, think you?"

"Into the Burgomaster's house," said Saxe.

"And we believe she is there," said Gustav.

"With her uncle? Then she's safe enough," said the saddler.

Gustav looked at Saxe, ready at a word to seize the old man and force him to speak, but no sign was given. Once before Saxe had stood in this room watching the saddler and wondering if he knew the secret. He watched him now. Bertha had hidden the saddler on the night of Bergolet's capture, but it was quite possible that she had taken the precaution to preserve her secret from the old man even as she had kept it from Bergolet.

"She couldn't be in a better place than with her uncle," said the saddler. "One of you's her lover, I suspect, afraid to go to an ordinary door to ask for her, so looking for a secret entrance some fool has made you believe in. Aye, that's the way of it, I expect. You'd be using me in your love affairs—me, an old fellow who's not thought of love for 30 years. You're a fine fellow," he went on, turning to Saxe, "and if anything could make me young again you and your love business would."

"I'm a lover right enough, Master Saddler, and I've a mind to go knocking at the Burgomaster's door."

And perhaps Saxe would have done it had Bertha been the only woman he had to think of tonight, had he not been forced to think of the Duchess, too.

The saddler bolted the door when his visitor had gone, and muttering, blew out the lantern and went to his bed. But not to sleep. What lay behind this visit tonight?

And with daybreak the men of the league met at an appointed place. They had no news of the woman they had searched for during the night, but they had overheard whisperings in taverns and they had noted things in the streets. Saxe listened and then gave his orders The streets were filling rapidly by the time their actions were decided upon.

At the appointed hour the Elector rode from the castle, his own men, eight of them, with him, and an escort of the Guard with their Captain, Prince Karl. The sun flashed upon a brave company, and there was cheering as it passed towards the Rathaus. Some looked for the Duchess, expecting her to ride with the Elector, but from the first this had not been intended. There had been no alteration in the plans.

The Elector acknowledged the cheers and spoke to Prince Karl from time to time as he rode beside him. The company went at walking pace, by a prearranged route, traversing many streets on their way to the market place. At a corner, when the Elector and the Prince had passed, a little knot of horsemen, waiting in a side street, took their place in the cavalcade. It was an unexpected addition, but had been ordered, no doubt. They were men of the Guard, only six or seven men, no one counted them exactly; it was a very small addition to the company.

So they came to the street running into the market plase. The crowd had grown denser, and in the last few minutes the Elector's face had become grave and thoughtful. There was little cheering. It might be the way of these people to hide their enthusiasm, but he turned to look at the company which surrounded him. Surely with such a company there could be no danger from unarmed citizens.

"They do not shout easily, your people of Metzburg," he said, turning to the Prince.

"It is a typical Metzburg welcome," was the answer.

Just then there came an ugly rush, and a burst of roaring voices, but it was not a welcome. The Elector looked quickly at Karl, waiting to hear his sharp orders. They did not come. One of his own men pressed to the Elector's side.

"Sir, I do not like the look of things," he whispered.

"Nor I. Be ready."

Swiftly upon the first followed another rush, from another quarter of the surging crowd and again a roar of voices—an angry roar. A thought flashed through the Elector's brain. Was this a carefully laid scheme? Having him in her power, had the Duchess dared to plot against him?

"Close up! Forward!" shouted the Prince.

The Elector checked his horse. To ride forward would only be to get further wedged in the midst of the angry crowd.

"Forward!" shouted Karl again.

The eight men had closed round their master, their hands on their weapons, waiting only his word; and then there was confusion in the company behind. The crowd had rushed in upon the horsemen, was separating them, carrying them to this side and that. But through the confusion came six or seven men, a compact mass; and as they came their swords sang from the scabbards and flashed in the sun.

From the Prince came a loud oath. Who had dared draw weapons without his orders?

"A man who thinks of himself as belonging to a particular national group in America has not yet become an American."

"The man who seeks to divide man from man, group from group, interest from interest in the United States is striking at its very heart."

"My advice is not only always to think first of America, but always also think of humanity."

"Humanity can be welded together only by love, by sympathy, by justice — not by jealousy and hatred."

"The example of America must be a special example."
